Ib. N. 53. Furthermore, the ſaid States deſiring that there might be nothing wanting, which ought to be required in this Matter, being ſeverally interrogated thereupon, did Conſtitute certain Perſons to be their Proctors or Agents, Named by the ſaid Commiſſioners to go to King Richard to reſign the Homage and Fealty that before had been made to Him, and give Him notice of what had been done touching ſuch His Depoſition, and Renunciation.

Ib. N. 54. And preſently, as ſoon as it appeared from the Premiſſes, and the occaſion thereof, that the Crown of England with the Appurtenances was Vacant, Henry Duke of Lancaſter riſing from His Seat, and ſtanding ſo erected as He might ſufficiently be ſeen by the People, Anno Dom. 1399. humbly Croſſing Himſelf on His Forehead, and on His Breaſt, and having firſt called upon the Name of Chriſt, Claimed the ſaid Kingdom of England, thus become Vacant, with the Crown, and all its Members and Appurtenances, in His Mother Tongue, in this Form of Words.

Ibid. In the Name of Fadher, Son, and Holy Goſt, I Henry of Lancaſter, Chalenge this Rewme of Ynglonde, and the Croun, with all the Membres, and the Appurtenances, als I that am deſcendit be Ryght Lyne of the Blode comyng fro the Gude Lord King Henry Therde, and thoge that Ryght that God of his Grace hath ſent me, with helpe of my Kyn, and of my Frendes to recover it; the which Rewme was in poynt to be ondone for defaut of Governance, and undoying of the Gude Lawes.

Ib. N. 54. After this Claim, as well the Lords Spiritual as Temporal, and all the States there preſent, were asked one by one, what they thought of it? who without any difficulty or delay, unanimouſly conſented that the Duke ſhould Reign over them. And immediately, ſo ſoon as He ſhew'd the States of the Kingdom King Richard's Signet, which He gave Him as a Token of His Intention, as was ſaid before, the Archbiſhop taking Henry by the Right Hand, led Him to the Royal Throne, and when the ſaid King had kneeled, and Prayed a while before it, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Archbiſhop of Tork Aſſiſting Him, He placed Himſelf therein; the People for great Joy ſhouting mightily.

Ib. N. 55. When the Shouting was over, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury made a ſhort Preachment, or Collation (as 'tis called in the Roll) his Text or Theme was, 1 Sam. C. ix. v. 17. the Engliſh Verſion of the whole Verſe, according to vulgar Edition, runs thus: And when Samuel ſaw Saul, the Lord ſaid unto him, Behold the Man whom I ſpake to thee of, this ſame ſhall rule over my People. The Intent of this Sermon was, to make a Compariſon between King Richard, whom he ſuppoſes to be a Child, and his whole Government a meer Childiſh way of Acting, and King Henry who is a perfect Wiſe Man. In this Diſcourſe he makes uſe of ſeveral Places of Scripture, but how properly, or to the Purpoſe, I ſhall not take upon me to determine: But at length he inſinuates, that by a Childiſh Government the Nation had been in great Danger, but now they were freed from it, becauſe a Man will Reign over us, one that neither acts nor ſpeaks, to wit, as a Child, but will in earneſt conſider Cogitabit Circumſpectionem Dei, God regards Him: So that He will diligently take Care that God's Will, not His own, be done. And thus in the Place of a Child wantoning in a Fooliſh and Stubborn Humour, a Man Rules over the People; and ſuch a Man that it may be ſaid of Him, A King ſhall Reign in Wiſdom, and ſhall execute Judgment, and do Juſtice in the Land.

Ib. N. 56. Which Collation ended, King Henry, to quiet and ſettle the Minds of His Subjects, ſaid Audibly theſe following Words.

Sires,

Anno Dom. 1399.

I Thank God and zowe Spirituel and Temporel, and all the Eſtates of the Lond and do zowe to wyte, it es noght my will that no Man think, that be waye of Conqueſt I wold Diſherit any Man of his Heritage; Franches, or other Ryghts that hym aght to have, no put him out of that that he has, and has had by the gude Lawes and Cuſtomes of the Rewme; except thoſe Perſons that has ben agayn the gude Purpoſe, and the Commune Profyt of the Rewme.

Ib. N. 57. And forthwith it being Conſidered that by the former Vacancy of the Throne by the Ceſſion and Depoſition of King Richard, the Power of all the Juſtices, Sheriffs, and other Officers thro' the Kingdom ceaſed; therefore leaſt Juſtice might be delayed to the Grievance of the People, the preſent King named His Principal Officers and Juſtices, who took the uſual Oaths; and forthwith Proclamation was made by the King's Command, that on Monday next after the Feaſt of St. Michael, a Parliament ſhould be held; and that on Monday next following, on the Feaſt of St. Edward, the Coronation ſhould be at Weſtminſter; and that all thoſe who claimed any Service there, might then put in their Claims and Petitions before the Steward, Conſtable, and Marſhal of England, in the White-Hall of the Palace, where they ſhould receive full Juſtice. But as for the ſhortneſs of time aſſigned for the Sitting of the Parliament, the King made Proteſtation, That it was not His Intention it ſhould be any Prejudice to the States of His Kingdom, or that it ſhould be made an Example for the Future; but that it was only for the Profit of the Kingdom, and eſpecially to ſpare the Labour and Expences of His Lieges, and that the Grievances of the People might have a more ſpeedy Remedy.

Ib. N. 58. All which Things being finiſhed, the King roſe from His Throne, and beholding the People with a Cheerful Countenance, departed; and the ſame Day in the White-Hall, He made a Splendid Entertainment for the Nobility and Gentlemen, who were there in great Numbers.

Theſe things were done on Tueſday the 30*th* of September.

And afterwards, on the next day, being Wedneſday, the Deputies, or Proctors before mention'd, went to Richard late King, in the Tower, as they had been enjoyned, viz. William Thirnyng Juſtitiary, for himſelf, and Fellow Procurators, in the Name of all the States and People, and notified to Richard, and fully declared the Admiſſion of His Renunciation, and the Manner, Cauſe, and Form of the Sentence of His Depoſition, and preſently Reſigned the Homage and Fealtie that had been made to the late King Richard, in the following Form.

But ſince I look upon this as already at an end, I ſhall conclude it with a ſhort Deſcription of this King's Perſon, and Character of his Diſpoſition, chiefly taken from the Actions of his Life.

As to his Perſon, He is deſcribed to have been one of the moſt aimable that ever Reign'd ſince the Conqueſt; he was tall of Stature, of ſtreight and long Limbs, of a fair Complexion, as might well beſit the Son of ſo Beautiful a Mother; and indeed if He reſembled that Picture which is ſtill to be ſeen behind the Stall next the Pulpit in the Choir of the Abby Church of Weſtminſter, His Face ſeems too fair and effeminate for a Man; but that this could not be drawn during His Life time, I have already ſhewn in my Introduction.

As for His Humour and Natural Temper, there was more to be blamed in His Education, than in His Nature; for there appeared in Him many good Inclinations, which might have grown to perfect Vertues, if they had not been blaſted by corrupt Flatterers in his Youth; he was of a credulous Diſpoſition, apt to believe, and therefore eaſie to be abuſed by thoſe for whom he had a kindneſs, which they too often made an ill uſe of, to the utter loſs of all eſteem and affection among his People; for tho' Princes may be very well indulged, as well as Private Perſons, in having their particular Friends and Favourites, yet ought it to be ſo limited as not to exceed the bounds of diſcretion and Moderation; but to prefer Men to Offices of the higheſt Dignity and Importance in the State, meerly for their outſide, or becauſe they have ſerved as the Inſtruments of their Pleaſure, or Luſt, is that which a Free-born People (as ours is) will never brook; and whoever will conſult our Hiſtories may find, that the greateſt Troubles that have fallen upon our Princes, have been originally, if not chiefly, on that account.

But to return to what we have digreſſed from. One of the beſt Qualities this King was Maſter of, was, that when he ſaw he could not help it, he for the preſent complyed with his Parliaments, in parting with and Baniſhing his Favourites, and bringing things again into good order, tho' it laſted but for a time; for as ſoon as he recovered his Power, he not only undid all that ever he had done before, but ſeverely revenged himſelf upon all thoſe who had any hand in making thoſe Reſtraints and Alterations; which tho' perhaps they were carried too far, yet certainly his deſire of Revenge muſt be very immoderate, which prompted him to put his Uncle the Duke of Glouceſter and other Lords to Death or Baniſhment, for things committed above nine Years before, which ſhewed him to be of a Temper not eaſily to forgive, if once he had been thoroughly offended.

And tho' He might have ſufficient Courage, yet we do not find that he often car'd to exert it, ſince he made no Warlike Expedition into France during his whole Reign, in order to recover what his Grandfather or himſelf had loſt there; and tho' he made two Expeditions into Ireland, as he did little in the firſt of them, ſo the latter proved his Ruin, as you have already ſeen; yet he might have gone near to have kept the Crown on his head, could he have continued in his firſt Reſolution of Marching with thoſe Forces he had left, againſt his Enemy the Duke of Lancaſter, in which if he had periſhed, he had ſtill died a King; tho' indeed he never ſhewed himſelf more worthy of Government, that when he was Depoſed as unworthy to Govern; for if he did not diſſemble, it appeared that his Regal State was not ſo dear unto him as a Private Life, which if he could have quietly enjoyed, perhaps he might have paſſed the reſt of his Days much more happily than under the toil and burthen of a Crown.

As for his other Qualities, he was rather Profuſe than Liberal in his Gifts and Expences, keeping a greater State and Hoſpitality than any of his Predeceſſors; inſomuch that our Hiſtorians relate, that above a Thouſand Perſons were every day fed from his Kitchin; and tho' we find no Publick Act of Charity done by him, yet his Rebuilding of Weſtminſter-Hall in that Noble manner it now ſtands, ſufficiently ſhews, that he loved to appear Great and Magnificent in whatever he undertook: tho' it is not Buildings, but Great and Worthy Undertakings for the Publick Good of his Country, that do really ſhew the Greatneſs of a Prince's Soul.

This Prince I confeſs is Taxed by ſeveral Writers, as a Perſon of a Diſſolute and Luxurious Life; but whether it was out of his great Love to his Queen, or from a Natural Gift of Continence, I do not find him Charged with any particular Miſtreſſes or Amours; and tho' She deceaſed, and left Him a Widdower, in the prime of His Years, we do not read of any Baſe Iſſue He had, either Male, or Female. Yet I muſt own, his too great affection to, and Familiarity with the Duke of Ireland, a Perſon of a moſt Beautiful Shape, gave too much occaſion to his Enemies to Cenſure it, as proceeding from a Cauſe fitter to be gueſſed at, than mentio'nd by an Hiſtorian, who ought not to traduce any, and eſpecially Princes, upon bare Suſpicions.

His Wives.

The Firſt was Anne, Daughter to Charles the Fourth, Emperor of Germany, who having been his Wife Twelve Years, Died without Iſſue.

His Second was Iſabelle, Eldeſt Daughter to Charles the Sixth, King of France, to whom he was Married the 28*th* of October, 1396. She being then not above Seven or Eight Years of Age, and therefore never Bedded Her; being Dethroned, and Murthered about Three Years after.

I shall say nothing of his death and burial since it happened under the next Reign. onely I shall take notice that in his last will, and Testament which ~~bears date~~ he wrote a little before his going over into Ireland, he appointed his body should be buried in the Abby Church of Westminster near that of his first Consort Queen Ann: which yet was not performed till above 15 years after in the Reign of Henry V. but I cannot but further take notice, that in this will he appointed the whole manner of his Funerals, which if observed would have been very magnificent and expensive. besides a great many considerable Legacies he bequeathed among his near friends and Relations, which since never payd need not to be further mentioned. onely must further observe that tho he left all the Crown Jewels to his successor, yet it is without ever naming him, so which shews that he was then uncertain whom he should be. whereas if he had then declared ~~named~~ the Earl of March to be ~~his~~ were Heir to the Crown (as some of our more modern Historians relate. it is very unlikely he should have omitted to name him in his will as he did all the other Legatees.

Statutes made at Weſtminſter, 21 Rich. II. A. D. 1397.

But all theſe being either obſolete, or repealed, I paſs by; among which is a Repeal of the Statutes made at Weſtminſter, and Shrewsbury, of which I have given a large Account in the Hiſtory.

Here follows the late Lord Chief Juſtice Hale's Account of the State and Progreſs of the Laws during this King's Reign.

RICHARD the Second ſucceeding His Grandfather, the Dignity of the Law, together with the Honour of the Government, by reaſon of the weakneſs of this Prince, and the Difficulties occurring in His Government, ſeem'd ſomewhat to decline, as may appear by comparing the twelve laſt Years of Edw. 3d, commonly called the Quadrageſimes, with the Reports of Richard 2d, wherein there appears a viſible Declination of the Learning and Depth of the Judges and Pleaders. It is true, we have no entire Reports Printed of Richard the Second's Reign, but yet I have ſeen in Manuſcript the entire Years and Terms of this King, out of which, or ſome other Copies thereof I ſuppoſe Fitzherbert abſtracted his Abridgment of thoſe broken Cauſes.

The Quadrageſimes.

In all theſe former Times, eſpecially from the end of Edward the Third, to the beginning of Edward the Fourth, the Learning of the Common Law conſiſted Principally in Aſſizes and Real Actions, and rarely was any Title determined in a Perſonal Action, unleſs in caſe of the Title of Rents or Services by Replevin; and the Reaſons were Principally theſe. Firſt, Becauſe thoſe Antient Times were great favourers of the Poſſeſſor; and therefore about the Reign of Edward the Second, if a Diſſeſſor had been in Poſſeſſion by a Year and a Day, he was not to be put out without a Recovery by Aſſize. Again, if the Diſſeiſor had made a Feoffment, they did not Countenance an Entry upon the Feoffee, becauſe he might thereby loſe his Warranty, which he ſaved being impleaded in an Aſſize or Writ of Entry, and by this means Real Actions were moſt frequent, as alſo Aſſizes. Secondly, They were willing to quiet Men's Poſſeſſions; and therefore after a Recovery or Bar in an Aſſize or Real Action, the Party was driven to an Action of an higher nature. Thirdly, Becauſe there was then no known Action, wherein the Party could ordinarily Recover his Poſſeſſion otherwiſe, than by an Aſſize or Real Action; for 'till the end of Edward the Fourth, the Poſſeſſion was not recovered in an Ejectione Firmæ, but only Damages. Fourthly, becauſe an Aſſize was a ſpeedy and effectual Remedy to recover the Poſſeſſion, the Jury being ready Empanel'd, and at the Bar, the firſt day: and altho' not by Diſuſage, the Practicers of the Law are not ſo ready in it now, yet the Proceſs thereof in thoſe times, was as well known to all Profeſſors of the Law, as now the Courſe of an Ejectione Firmæ is.

Church-Affairs in this King's Reign, Relating to the Encroachments of the Pope in the Matter of Proviſions to Biſhopricks, &c.

Rot. Parl. 1 Rich. 2. N. 77. Cott. Abr. 161.

AS in the laſt Reign, ſo in this, the Pope practiſed his Encroachments upon the Church and State, therefore in the firſt Parliament of this King, the Commons Petition, That whereas in the Treaty between K. Edward the 3*d*, and the Pope, He had conſented to abſtain from all manner of Proviſions by way of Reſervation of Benefices, eſpecially of ſuch Dignities as were Elective; yet the Court of Rome had no regard to the King's Meſſengers ſent thither about this Matter; but the Pope ſtill continued his former Practices, contrary to the Treaty, Grant, and Accord with the ſaid King Edward, to the great prejudice of Himſelf, and his Subjects, wherefore they pray Remedy.

2. Rich. 2. N. 78.

What Remedy they had then, I find not; but the next Year, in oppoſition to certain Rebel Cardinals, there was an Act paſſed, that Urban was duly Elected and declared to be the true Pope, and as ſuch, Head of Holy Church, He ought to be Accepted and Obeyed; and to this all the Prelates, Lords and Commons agreed.

See the Stat. at large, 3 Rich. 2. c. 3.

The next Year the People Complained and Petitioned, ſhewing, that Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Abbeys, Priories, and other Benefices of the Kingdom were filled with Men of another Language, and of ſtrange Lands and Nations, and ſometimes Enemies of the King, and Kingdom, which never made Reſidence in the ſame, or performed the Charge thereof. Whereupon the King by Advice and common Aſſent of all the Lords Temporal, Ordained, that none of His Liege People of what Condition ſoever they were, ſhould take or receive any Procuracy, Letter of Attorny, Farm, or other Adminiſtration by Indenture, or in any other manner, of any Benefice within England, but only of the King's Subjects, without his ſpecial Licenſe, by Advice of His Council, nor ſend out of the Kingdom any Gold, Silver, or other Treaſure or Commodity by Bill of Exchange, Merchandiſe, or any other manner; and thoſe that did the contrary, ſhould incur the Pain and Puniſhment contained in the Statute of Proviſors.

Vid. the Stat. 7 Rich. 2. Cap. 12. & Rot. Parl. N. 49.

Yet it appears by the Complaint and Petition of the Commons, with the Aſſent of the King and Lords Temporal, that this Prohibition proved ineffectual for the end intended; and therefore it was reinforced, and in his ſeventh Year agreed by the King, the Lords Temporal, and Commons, that the ſame Statutes ſhall keep their Force and Effect in all Points; and that all Aliens who have Purchaſed or ſhall Purchaſe any Benefice, Dignity, or thing of Holy Church, and in his proper Perſon take poſſeſſion of the ſame, or uſe it himſelf within the Kingdom to his own Benefit, or of any other, without ſpecial Licenſe of the King, ſhall be compriſed in the ſame Statute.

But neither had this Reinforcement its due effect; and therefore in His Twelfth Year it was Ordained and Aſſented by the Parties aforeſaid, That no Liegeman of the King, of whatſoever Eſtate or Condition he be, ſhould paſs over the Sea, nor ſend out of the Realm of England without ſpecial leave of the King Himſelf, to provide or purchaſe for himſelf Benefice of Holy Church with Cure or without Cure in the ſaid Realm; and if any do, and by vertue of ſuch Proviſion, accept by him, or by any other, any Benefice of the ſame Realm, that at that time the ſame Proviſor ſhall be out of the King's Protection, and the ſame Benefice become void; ſo that it ſhall be Lawful for the Patron, as well Spiritual as Temporal, to preſent to the ſame an able Clerk at his pleaſure.

Ib. 13 Rich. 2. Cap. 2.

Nor could this hinder Proviſions, Gifts, and Sale of Benefices of all ſorts by the Pope; for in the next Year the Commons require the King that the Statute of Proviſors made in the 25*th* of Edward I. might be recieved in Parliament; and then it was alſo Ordained and Eſtabliſhed, that if any accept of any Benefice of Holy Church, contrary to that Statute, and it be duly proved, he being beyond Sea, that then he ſhall abide Exiled, and Baniſhed out of the Realm for ever, and his Lands and Tenements, Goods and Chattels Forfeit to the King; and if he be within the Kingdom, he ſhould be alſo Exiled, and Baniſhed, and incur the ſame Forfeiture, and avoid the Realm within ſix Weeks next after ſuch acceptation. And if any one receive ſuch Perſon after the ſix Weeks are expired, he ſhall be Baniſhed, and incur the ſame Forfeiture.

Ib. Cap. 3.

And it was then further Ordained, and Eſtabliſhed, that if any Man brought or ſent within the Kingdom, or the King's Dominions, any Summons, Sentence, or Excommunication againſt any Perſon of what Condition ſoever he be, for the Cauſe of making any Motion, Aſſent or Execution of the Statute of Proviſors (as above) he ſhall be taken, Arreſted, and put in Priſon, and Forfeit all his Lands and Tenements, Goods and Chattels for ever, and moreover incur the pain of Life and Member: and if any Prelate make Execution of ſuch Summons, Sentences, or Excommunications, that his Temporalities be taken, and abide in the King's Hands 'till due Redreſs and Correction be therefore made; and if any Perſon of leſs Eſtate than a Prelate, of what Condition ſoever he be, make ſuch Execution, he ſhall be taken, Arreſted, and put in Priſon, and make Fine and Ranſom by Diſcretion of the King's Council.

[1.] Ib. 16 Rich. 2. 5 cap. & Rot. Parl. N. 20.

Notwithſtanding [1.] this Care and theſe Laws made againſt the Pope's Practices in this Kingdom, the Commons in the Parliament, of the Sixteenth Year of this King, ſhewed unto Him, grievouſly Complaining, that foraſmuch as He, and all his Liege People ought of Right, and of old time were wont, to ſue in the King's Court to recover their Preſentments to Churches, Prebends, and other Benefices of Holy Church, to which they have Right to preſent, the Cogniſance of Plea of which Preſentment belongeth only to the King's Court of the old Right of his Crown uſed in the time of his Progenitors, Kings of England; and when Judgment was given in the ſame Court, upon ſuch a Plea, and Preſentment, the Arch-Biſhops, Biſhops, and other Spiritual Perſons which had Inſtitution of ſuch Benefices within their Juriſdictions, were bound and had made Execution of ſuch Judgments by the King's Commands of all the time aforeſaid, without interruption; (for another lay Perſon could make ſuch Execution) and alſo they were bound of Right to make Execution of many other of the King's Commands, of which Right the Crown of England had been peaceably Seiſed until this day: But now of late divers Proceſſes have been made by the Biſhops of Rome, and Cenſures of Excommunication upon Certain Biſhops of England; becauſe they had made Execution of ſuch Commands, to the open Diſheriſon of the Crown, and Deſtruction of the King, his Laws, and all his Kingdom, if Remedy be not provided: They further Complain of the Pope's Tranſlation of Biſhops from Biſhoprick, to Biſhoprick, and ſending ſome out of the Kingdom, who were fit to be of the King's Council, and able to give Him Advice, without his Aſſent, and againſt his Will: So that the Crown of England, which had been ſo free at all times, that it had been in Subjection to no Earthly Sovereign, but immediately Subject to God, and to none Other, in all things touching the Regaly or Royalty of the Crown, ſhould be ſubmitted to the Biſhop of Rome and the Laws and Statutes of this Realm by Him Defeated and Deſtroyed at his Will, in perpetual Deſtruction of the King his Crown and Regaly, and all his Realm, which God forbid. Wherefore they declare, that they and all the Liege Commons of the Kingdom would ſtand by the King, his Crown, and Regaly in the Caſes aforeſaid, and in all other Caſes attempted againſt Him, his Crown and Regaly in all Points to live and die. And further they pray the King, and him require by way of Juſtice, that He would ask all the Lords in Parliament, as well Spiritual as Temporal, Severally, and all the States of Parliament, what they thought of the Caſes aforeſaid? Whereupon the Lords Temporal being ſo asked, anſwered every one by himſelf, that the Caſes aforeſaid were clearly in Derogation of the King's Crown and of his Regaly, as it was well, and had been a long time known; and that they would be with the Crown and Regality in theſe Caſes eſpecially, and in all others which ſhall be attempted againſt them in all Points, with all their Power. That Anſwer of the Lords Spiritual to the King's Demands, was much to the ſame purpoſe as that of the Lords Temporal, will beſt appear from the Arch-Biſhops Proteſtation (ſo called upon the Parliament Roll, as 'tis tranſcribed in Dr. Brady's Appendix to his laſt Volume, Number 118. and there tranſlated from the French Record, to which I refer the Reader.

These are the words of the Parliament Roll, 16 Rich. 2. N. 20.

Rot. Parl. 16 Rich. 2. N. 20.

[2.] Ib.

After [2.] which Anſwers given to the King by Aſſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, at the Prayer of the Commons. It was Ordained and Eſtabliſhed that if any one Purchaſe or Perſue, or cauſe to be Purchaſed or Perſued in the Court of Rome, or elſewhere, any ſuch Tranſlations, Proceſſes and Sentences of Excommunications, Bulls, Inſtruments, or any other things which touch the King, and are againſt Him, his Crown, Regaly, or Kingdom, as is aforeſaid; then they that bring them within the Realm, or receive them, or make thereof Notification, or any other Execution within the Kingdom, or without, they, their Notaries, Procurators, Maintainers, Abettors, Fautors and Counſellors, ſhall be put out of the King's Protection; their Lands and Tenements, Goods and Chattels forfeited ; and alſo attached by their Bodies, if to be found, and brought before the King and his Council, there to Anſwer; and that Proceſs ſhall be made againſt them by Premunire facias, in manner as it is Ordained in other Statutes and Proviſors.

After this there is nothing further that I have ſeen about theſe Controverſies, the Pope being quiet all the reſt of his Reign ; yet I ſhall take notice of ſome things done by the King relating to theſe Affairs, which were omitted in their due Place.

He [1.] cauſed James Dardain the Pope's Collector in England, to ſwear he would be faithful to Him and his Crown ; that he would not do, permit, or procure to be done, any thing prejudicial to Him, his Kingdom, Laws, and Rights ; and that he would not put in Execution any Papal Letters, or Mandates, or permit them to be put in Execution, that were prejudicial to the King, his Regality or Laws, and Rights, or to his Kingdom ; that he would not receive, or publiſh any of the Pope's Letters, but ſuch as he ſhould deliver to the King's Council, as ſoon as he could ; that he would not ſend any Money or Plate out of the Kingdom, unleſs he had ſpecial Licenſe from the King or his Council ; nor that he would introduce any Novelties, either by or without the Pope's Command, without the King's Licenſe, and that he would keep the King's Laws and Rights without violation. This Oath was taken Auguſt 27th. in the 12*th*, of Richard II. before his Council, as appears by the Record it ſelf.

[1.] Rot. Cl. 12 Rich. 2. M. 30. Dorſ.

Then [2.] the King wrote to William Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, that he could not but know that he was bound by Oath for the Conſervation of the Rights and Cuſtoms of the Kingdom, and for the Indempnity and Right Government of his People, that no Impoſitions upon the People could be made, or Levied any ways whatſoever, without the Common Council, or Conſent of the Kingdom ; and further, that He had been petitioned by the Commons lately Aſſembled in Parliament at Weſtminſter, to provide Remedy againſt the Impoſitions upon the Clergy, at that time publiſhed and exacted by the Pope ; and alſo that any one that ſhould bring in any Pope's Bulls to Levy ſuch Impoſitions, or create ſuch Novelties, not formerly uſed, which might bring Damage to Him or his Kingdom, or ſhould publiſh ſuch Impoſitions and Novelties, or Collect or Levy them, ſhould be adjudged, and ſuffer as a Traitor to Him and his Kingdom : And further, that it was granted by Him, with Aſſent of the ſame Parliament, that nothing ſhould be Levied or paid, which might tend to the Burthen and Damage of the Kingdom or Leige People : Yet all this notwithſtanding, He was informed of a new Impoſition upon the Clergy by the Pope, which by his Authority, or the Authority of his Suffragans by his Command, was to be levied without the Common Advice, and Aſſent of the Kingdom, which He might not ſuffer to be done, ſaving his ſaid Oath, and then Commanded him, by the Faith in which he was bound to Him, and under forſeiture of all he could forfeit, to revoke all that had been done for the Levying and exacting of this Impoſition, and to return what had been paid and Levyed ; enjoyning him not to pay or contribute any thing to this Subſidy or Impoſition, under the foreſaid Faith and Forſeiture. Witneſs the King at Weſtminſter the Tenth day of October.

Ib. The like Writ was alſo directed to James Dardain, then the Pope's Nuncio, to deſiſt from the exacting of this Impoſition, under the forfeiture of Life and Members, and all things he could forfeit. Witneſſed as before.

This Impoſition was the Payment of a Tenth by the Clergy to the Pope, by Him laid upon them, as appears by the Todding, or Title of the Record concerning Tenths not to be paid to the Pope.

Ib. 14 Rich. 2. m. 13. In the Fourteenth Year of his Reign He cauſed Proclamation to be made throughout England, to call from Rome, under forfeiture of Life and Member, and all they could forfeit, Several Perſons that had gone thither to procure the Nulling and Vacating of divers Statutes made by Him, and his Progenitors, with Conſent of Parliament, for the Common profit of the Kingdom; and to perpetrate many other Evils there, to the Contempt, and prejudice of his Perſon, to the great Damage of the Kingdom and People, and to the manifeſt Ceſſation of the Laws and Cuſtoms thereof; that they ſhould be in England by the Feaſt of St. Martin in Winter (or the Eleventh of November*) at furtheſt; and that no man of what State or Condition ſoever he was, ſhould bring any Pope's Bulls, Proceſſes, or Inſtruments for the Adnulling or vacating of any of the Statutes, Laws or Cuſtoms aforeſaid, or Obey them, or put them in Execution, under the forfeiture aforeſaid. The Statutes for which the Perſons went to Rome to have made void by the Pope, and were recalled by this Proclamation, were the Statute of Proviſors laſt enacted, the Statutes of Quare impedit, and Præmunire facias, and ſuch like, which the Pope ſaid were againſt and injurious to Eccleſiaſtick Liberty; for the particular Account whereof ſee Walſingham's Hiſtory, Fol. 344, & 345, A. Rot. Clauſ. 20 Rich. 2. M. 3. Dors. In the Twentieth Year of His Reign, on the Nineteenth of September, the King cauſed Lewis Biſhop of Vultura in Apulia, the Pope's Collector, to take the ſame Oath before Himſelf in Chancery, which James Dardain had taken in the Twelfth of His Reign, before His Council.

Concerning John Wyckliff, and his Followers.

THE Opinions of John Wyckliff prevailed very much (as I ſaid before) in the Univerſity of Oxford, and not a few Learned Men maintain'd them in the Schools, and Preached them up there, and in many other Places and Countries; inſomuch that in the Fourth Year of this King, 1381, William de Berton, Chancellor of that Univerſity, calling together ſeveral Doctors of Divinity, and other Profeſſors of Spelman's Concil. 2. Vol. f. 267.

and Skilful in the Canon-Law, to Examine into thoſe Opinions, they were upon great Debate and Conſultation judged to be Erroneous, Repugnant to the Determinations of the Church, and Contradictory to Catholick Verity; and therefore forbad every one, of what Degree or Condition ſoever, under the pain of the Greater Excommunication, publickly to Hold, Teach or Defend the ſame in the Univerſity.

Upon the further ſpreading of theſe Opinions amongſt the Great Men and Populacy, William Courtney Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Seven other Biſhops of that Province, Fourteen Doctors of the Canon and Civil Laws, Seventeen Maſters of Divinity, and Six Batchelors of Divinity, on the Seventeenth of May, 1382, met in a Chamber of the Fryar-Preachers in London, where having Conſidered and Deliberated upon the Opinions and Concluſions, then divulged, Unanimouſly on the Seven and Twentieth of the ſame Month, Declared and Decreed ſome of them Heretical, others Erroneous, and contrary to the Determination of the Church. Ib. fol. 629, 630, 631.

The ſuppoſed Heretical OPINIONS were theſe.

1. That the Material Subſtance of Bread and Wine, remained after Conſecration, in the Sacrament of the Altar.
2. Alſo, that the Accidents do not remain with a Subject after Conſecration in the ſame Sacrament.
3. Alſo, that Chriſt is not in the Sacrament of the Altar, Identically, Truly and Really, in his proper Corporeal Preſence.
4. Alſo, that if a Biſhop or Prieſt be guilty of Mortal Sin, he can neither Ordain, Conſecrate, nor Baptize.
5. Alſo, that if a Man were duly Contrite, all external Confeſſion was ſuperfluous and unprofitable.
6. Alſo, pertinaciouſly to aſſert, that Chriſt's having Ordained Maſs, had no Foundation in the Goſpels.
7. Alſo, that God ought to obey the Devil. [But this is too Blaſphemous.]
8. Alſo, if the Pope be an ill Man, and by conſequence a Member of the Devil, He hath no Power over the Faithful of Chriſt given Him by any one, unleſs perhaps by Cæſar.
9. Alſo, that after Urban VI. no Man is to be received as Pope, but we ought to live, as the Græcians, under our own Laws.
10. Alſo, to aſſert, That 'tis againſt Holy Scripture, that Eccleſiaſtics ſhould have Temporal Poſſeſſions.

The ſuppoſed Erroneous CONCLUSIONS were theſe.

1. That no Prelate ought to Excommunicate any one, unleſs he firſt knew he was Excommunicated by God.
2. Alſo, that any one who did ſo Excommunicate, became thereby an Heretick, and Excommunicate himſelf.
3. Alſo, a Prelate Excommunicating a Clerk, who appealed to the King and his Council, is in very deed a Traytor to God, the King, and Kingdom.
4. Alſo, they that leave off Preaching, or hearing the Word of God, or Goſpel Preached, for the Excommunication of Men, are Excommunicated, and ſhall be held for Traytors to God in the Day of Judgment.

5. Alſo, to aſſert that 'tis Lawful ſor any one, tho' a Deacon or Prieſt, to Preach the Word of God, without Papal or Epiſcopal Authority, or other, which ſufficiently appeareth.

6. Alſo, to aſſert that none is a Civil Lord, none is a Biſhop, none is a Prelate, while he is guilty of Mortal Sin.

7. Alſo, that Temporal Lords may at their pleaſure take away Temporal Goods from Eccleſiaſticks, being habitual Delinquents, or that the Populacy when they will, may correct Delinquent Lords.

8. Alſo, that Tythes are pure Alms, and that the Pariſhioners, for the Sins of their Curates, may detain them, and as they pleaſe give them to others.

9. Alſo, that particular Prayers applied to one Perſon, by Prelates or Religious, are no more Benefit to that Perſon, than General Prayers are to him, all other things being equal.

10. *Alſo, in that very thing, that any one takes upon him of whatſoever private * Religion, he is made more unfit and unable to obſerve God's Commandments.*

* i. e. Profeſſions of Monkery.

11. Alſo, Saints Inſtituting whatſoever private Religions, as well thoſe with Poſſeſſions, as Mendicants, have Sinned in ſo Inſtituting.

12. Alſo, that Religious Perſons living in private Religions, are not Christians.

13. Alſo, that Fryars are Bound to get their Food by the Labour of their Hands, and not by Begging.

14. Alſo, he that gives Alms to Fryars, or to a Fryar-Preacher, is Excommunicate, as well as he that receives it.

Ib. 631, 632.

In perſuance of which Determinations, on the 20*th* Day of June, in the ſame Year and Place, Nicholas Hereford, Philip Rapyngdon, a Ca non Regular, both Profeſſors of Divinity, and John Ayſhton Maſter o Arts, and Scholar in Divinity at Oxford, and the Chief Followers o Wyckliff, appeared Perſonally before the Arch-biſhop, the ſaid Doctors and others, and there the ſaid Nicholas and P*hilip* were Commande to Anſwer, and to ſpeak fully and plainly what they thought of theſe Concluſions. Thereupon they gave in their Anſwers in Writing, Pro teſting, as otherwiſe they had done, that they intended to be humble and faithful Sons of the Church, and of Holy Scripture, and to obey i all things the Determination of the Church; and if they ſhould commi any E*rrour* againſt this their Intention, either in Word or in Deed they ſubmitted themſelves to the Correction of the Archbiſhop, and all others to whom it belonged to Correct them. * This is a Decree in the Decretals, beginning with theſe words.

To the Second Concluſion, That the Accidents do not remai without a Subject after Conſecration in the ſame Sacrament, to hol contrary to the Decree in the Decretals, that begin with theſe Words Concedimus quod eſt Hæreſis, We grant is Hereſie.

To the Third Concluſion, That Chriſt was not in the ſame Sacramen Identically, Truly, and Really in his Proper Corporal Preſence. The Anſwer, That altho' the Concluſion conſiſts of uncouth and unintell gible Words, yet to go contrary to the Senſe of that Decretal in th

Clementines, * Si Dominum, we grant is Hereſie. And briefly, as to the whole Matter of the Sacrament of the Altar, and every other, we profeſs we will, as well in Words as Senſe, Agree with the Holy Scripture, the Determinations of the Church, and Opinions of the Holy Doctors.

* This was a Decree beginning with theſe two words.

The Fourth and Fifth Concluſions they plainly granted to be Hereſies.

To the Sixth, That God ought to obey the Devil, they Anſwer to this Senſe; That to ſay God in his proper Perſon or Eſſence ought to Obey the Devil with an Obedience of Neceſſity, We grant it is Hereſie. And thus Evaſively and Sophiſtically they Anſwered to moſt of the Concluſions or Opinions, being both Heretical, and Erroneous.

Their Anſwers not pleaſing the Archbiſhop and his Aſſeſſors, they deſired others more Expreſs; but then they ſaid they knew not how better to Anſwer to the Three firſt, becauſe they had Anſwer'd in Writing, and would Anſwer no otherwiſe.

Ib.

And to the Sixth Concluſion, becauſe they had not Anſwer'd fully, and expreſly, they were asked, Whether God owed any mode or manner of Obedience to the Devil? they Anſwered Yea, to wit, the Obedience of Charity, becauſe he ſtill loved him, yet puniſhed him as he ought; and to prove that God ought thus to Obey the Devil, they offer'd themſelves againſt any Man, under pain of being burnt.

After theſe Firſt and Second Anſwers, the Archbiſhop asked all the Doctors what they thought of them? Who ſaid one by one, that the Anſwers to the Firſt, Second, Third, and Sixth Concluſions were Inſufficient, Heretical, and Deceitful, and to the others Erroneous, and Perverſe.

Whereupon the Archbiſhop again Admoniſhed them to Anſwer fully, plainly and expreſly, without any Subtle, Sophiſtical, or Logical Terms or Meanings, and gave them eight Days time longer for it, but they refuſed to do it.

There is nothing more of them in this Place, only that Ayſhton anſwered more impertinently, and nothing to the purpoſe, as if he underſtood not what was demanded of, or ſaid to him; which ſeems rather a piece of Cunning, than Simplicity.

The firſt we hear of them further, is, from the King's Writ, Dated July 13. in the Sixth Year of His Reign, which was the July next following; in which, as in ſeveral others about this Matter, the King takes upon Him the Title of Defender of the Faith, long before the Pope's pretended Gift of that Title to Henry the Eighth. ‘This Writ was directed to the Chancellor and Proctors of the Univerſity of Oxford, to enquire after all ſuch of whatever Profeſſion or Degree, or others within the Limits and Juriſdiction of the ſaid Univerſity, that favoured or believed any Hereſies or Errors, and eſpecially ſuch as had been Condemned by William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and his Aſſeſſors; or that Believed, Held or Defended any of thoſe Hereſies, Errors, or the like, or that received John Wycklif, Nicholas Herford, Philip Raypydon, or John Ayſhton, or any one noted of the ſame Hereſies or Errors into their Houſes, or Converſed with them, or defended and ſhew'd them Favour; and if they found any ſuch, to Baniſh and Expell them the Univerſity and Town of Oxford, within Seven Days after they knew any of them, till they ſhewed, before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury for the time being, by manifeſt Purga‘tion, or denial of their Opinions, their Innocency; and they were further to ſearch the Colleges and Halls for Books Compoſed by John Wyckliſſ, and Nicholas Hereford, and to do all this upon the Faith and Liegance in which they were bound to the King, and under Forfeiture of the Liberties and Privileges of the Univerſity, and what elſe they might or could Forſeit; with Command to the Sheriff of the County, and Mayor of Oxford, and all other Sheriffs, Mayors, Bayliffs, Officers, and other His Subjects, to Obey and Aſſiſt them in the Execution of the Premiſes. Dated at Weſtminſter, Tertio Decimo Julii. Per Conſilium.

Lib. 1. f. 191. Col. 2. Mr. Wood in his Hiſtory and Antiquities of Oxford, tells us, that John Ayſhton made his Recantation and Confeſſion before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury on the 19*th* of July following, in Latin and Engliſh; whereupon by his Letters, he was reſtored to his Univerſity. Exerciſes, and Reading in the Schools, which he Performed without the leaſt touch of Hereſie.

Col. 2655, 2656. Henry de Knyghton reports the Renuntiations and Confeſſions of Nicholas Hereford, and others, and of John Ayſhton, in the Engliſh of thoſe Times, in theſe Words.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Wytes alle Chriſten Men, that we Nichol of Herford, and my fellow Priſtus, unworthy in Preſence of our Goſtely Fader, the Erchebiſhop of Canterbury, the nyngtende day of Juny, zeer of Grace a thouſand thre hundred fourſcore and two, in the Houſe of the Freres-Prechoures at London, when we weren required to ſayne what we felyde of divers Concluſions we maden this Proteſtation, and zit we maken: That our entent was, and is to be trewe Sones, and meke, of Holy Chirche and zif happy as God Schilde, that we erren agaynes this intent in wordus or in workus, we ſubmytte us mekelyche to the Correction of oure forſayde Fadur the Erche-Biſhop of Canturbery, and of all other to whom it longyth to Redreſs them that erren, and afterwarde to warn were requirede to ſay our beleve of the Sacrament of the Autere as to zoure underſtondyng, outh the People, we knowlechene fyrſt that the Pryſt takus in his honde, thorowe the Vertue of the Sacramental Wordus is made and turnyde veralyche into Chriſtus Body, the ſame that was taken, and ben of the Mayden Marye, and that ſufferide deth on the Croſſe for Mankynde, and that laye in the Sepulcre, and that ros fro deth to lyve the thirdde daye, and ſtey up into Hevene, and ſyttes in joye in the Bliſſe of the Fadur, and that ſchal come at the day of dome, to dome the quikke and the dede, and the Wyne is allſo turnyde veralyche into his Blode, ſo that leves after the Conſecration of Brede and Wyne, none other ſubſtance than that ilk that is Chriſtus fleſh and blode. And furthermore we beleve that the hole Body of Chriſt is whole in the Sacrament, and hole in everyche part ye of the Sacrament of the Autere; and alſo we beleve that Chriſt is verayliche in the ſame Sacrament in his Bodely preſence, to Savacion to alle hem, that worthelyche receyven to her dampnation; and this is our beleve, and in this bene thorou Grace of God, we will dye in Remiſſion of our Synes, and therefore we pry alle Chriſten Men to whom this Confeſſion ſchal come to that ze bere us wittneſs of this beleve at the day of Dome before the heyreſt Judge Jheſy Chriſt, and pray for us for Charitie.

That of Ayſhton is thus Verbatim in the old Engliſh Original.

In the Name of God Amen. Y John Ayſhon Priſt, unworthely required of my Lord Erchebiſhop of Canterbury, the Nyntene Day of June, in the Zer of Grace, in the Hous, &c. to ſay what I felyde in the matyr of the Sacrament of the Autere; Y have knowlechyde, and zit I do, that the ſelf Bred that the Priſt holdes in his hondes is made thorou the Vertue of the Sacramental wordus, verely the ſelf Chriſtus Body that was borne of the Maden Marye, and takun and ſuffrede Deth on the Croſſe, and three Days lay in the Sepulchre, and the thirdde Day roſe from the Dede to the Lyve, and ſteyed up into Heven and ſyttes on the ryght hand of God, and in the Day of Dome ſchal come to Dome the quikke, and the dede: and over this I believe Generally, all that Holy Writte determynet in worde and in underſtonding, or whatever Holy Kirke of God determynes of all this, when I was required ſpecially to ſay what I helde of this Propoſition. For I wote wele, that the matter and ſpeculation thereof paſſes in heyzte myn underſtonding, and therefore als mykele tellys openly for to leve in this matyr, or of any other touching the ryght beleve of Holy Kirke, that is nouzt expreſide in holy writte, I believe as our Modur Holy Kirke beleves, and in this belyve I will dye; and of this thing I beſeke all Men and all Wymmen to whom this Confeſſion come to, to bere me wittneſs before the higheſt Judge at the day of Dome. Ib.

As Wykliff's Followers encreaſed, ſo their Doctrines multiplied, and they often Publiſhed and Preached different Opinions one from another. The ſame Author notes, he heard above Sixty Preach at Leyceſter, very different from, or beſides what were firſt Publiſhed by Doctor Wyckliff. Id. Col. 2657, ad 26. 81.

And further, this Author Reports, that the number of the Lollards mightily encreaſing, they alſo taught many new and very ſtrange Opinions; Twenty five he notes, whereof ſeveral were not taught before; amongſt which, (beſides ſome others) the Sixteenth is that of our preſent Quakers about Swearing: viz. It is not Lawful to Swear in any manner; and when they Witneſſed any thing, theſe were their words, I am syk yr it is ſoth; i. e. I am ſure it is Truth; or thus, without doubt it is ſo. Id. Col. 2706, ad 2708.

All I find further of the Wyckliffiſts or Lollards in this Reign, are chiefly ſeveral Writs or Commiſſions upon the Archbiſhop's Petition granted to him, and his Suffragans and others, to Impriſon the Preachers and Diſperſers of Errors and Hereſies; alſo a Commiſſion to Rot. Pat. 19. Rich. II. M. 12.

certain Perſons to ſearch for, and ſeize Books containing Hereſie, &c. and to bring them before the Council, and make Proclamation, that none ſhould Buy or Sell them under pain of Impriſonment, and to Arreſt and Impriſon all ſuch as complied not with the Proclamation.

There were many in the City of London, that about this time frequented Conventicles in Private Places, where the Opinions and Concluſions of Wyckliff and his Followers were Debated and Taught. Wherefore upon notice hereof, the King ſends his Writ to the Mayor and Sheriffs of London, to make Proclamation from time to time within the City and Liberties of the ſame, ‘That no one of whatever State, Degree, Sex, or Condition they might be, ſhould preſume to make any ſuch Conventicles, or Meetings, under pain of Forfeiting whatever they could Forfeit, and Impriſonment of their Bodies during the King's Pleaſure. It is very Remarkable that in all theſe Writs and Commiſſions, King Richard took upon Him the Title of Defender of the Faith, in theſe Words; Nos Zelo Fidei Catholicæ, cujus ſumus & Volumus eſſe Defenſores, ſerves as an Introduction to his Profeſſion, againſt all Errors and Hereſies.

I ſhall mention but one Record more of a Memorandum of an unuſual Oath, taken by ſome of this ſort of Men, when they relinquiſhed what they had Defended and Taught, and returned to the Practices, Opinions and Uſages of the then Church.

Rot. Clauſ. 19 Rica. 2. M. 18.

Be it remembred that on the firſt day of September, in the Year of the Reign of King Richard the Second, after the Conqueſt the Nineteenth, William Dynett, Nicholas Taylour, Nicholas Poucher, and William Steyneur of Nottingham, Perſonaly appearing in Chancery, every one by himſelf took an Oath in the Form following.

I William Dynett, before Yhowe Worſhipful Fadur, and Lord Arch-Biſhop of Yhork, and Yhour Clergie, with my free will and full abyſede, ſwere to God and to all his Seyntes, upon this Holy Goſpelle, that fro this day forward I ſhall worſhip Ymages with preyng and offering unto hem in the worſhip of Seintes, that they be made after. And alſo I ſhall never more deſpyſe Pygremage ne ſtates of Holy Chyrche in no Degree. And alſo I ſhall be * buxum to the Lawes of Holy Chyrche, and to yhowe as myn Arch-Biſhop, and to myn other Ordinaries and Curate, and keep tho Laws upon my Power, and meynteyn hem. And alſo I ſhall never more meynten, ne techen ne defenden, Errours, Concluſions, ne techynges of the Lollards, ne ſwych Concluſions and Techynges, that Men clepeth Lollardys Doctryne, ne I ſhall her Books, ne ſwych Books ne hem, or only ſuſpect or Diffamede of Lollardy reſceyve ne Company withall, wittingly or Defend in tho matters: And if I know ony ſwych, I ſchall with all the haſt that I may do yhowe, or elſe yhowr Offycers to wytten and of her Bokes. And alſo I ſhall excyte and ſtyrr all tho to good Doctrine that I have hindered with myne Doctrine upp my power. And I ſhall ſtond to your Declaration wych es Hereſie or Errour and do thereafter, and alſo what Penance yhe woll for that

* i.e. Plyant, or obedient.

I have done, for meynteyning of this falſe Doctrine I ſhall fulfill it, and I ſubmit me thereto up my Power. And alſo I ſhall make no other Gloſe of this myn Oth, but os the words ſtonde. And if it be ſo, that I come agayn, or do agayn this Oth, or any part thereof, I yheld me here Cowpable as an Heretick, and to Forfeit all my Goods to the King's Will, without any other Proceſs of Law; and thereto I require the Notary to make of all this, which is my Will, an Inſtrument agayns me.

> And moreover, the ſame William Dynett, the ſame Day granted and acknowledged that all his Goods and Chattels ſhould be Forfeit to Us, i. e. the King, in caſe he any ways contraven'd the ſaid Oath, or did any thing againſt what was Contain'd in it.

All I can further find concerning the Followers of Wickliff, is, that A. D. 1394, in the Eighteenth Year of this King, the Clergy being met in two ſeveral Synods, at St. Paul's, and York, thoſe of the Province of Canterbury Petition'd their Archbiſhop, as thoſe of York did theirs, (who was then the Lord Chancellor) for the ſpeedy and effectual Puniſhment and Suppreſſion of the Lollards, for ſo the Wicklefites began then to be called. And I ſuppoſe the reaſon of their Petition, was, becauſe whilſt theſe Convocations were Sitting, as well as the Parliament at the ſame time, ſome Perſons in the Name of theſe pretended Hereticks, had the boldneſs privately to fix certain * Concluſions (being Twelve in Number) to the Doors of St. Paul's Church; wherein calling themſelves the Poor Men of Chriſt, they declared againſt the Superſtitions of the Church of Rome; which, together with their Reaſons, being ſomewhat too long, I ſhall only give you the brief Heads of them.

Dr. Wake's State of the Church, p. 324.

* Vid. Chronicon Manuſcr. Thom. Walſingham, in Bib. Bod. N. B. F. 9. 1.

The Firſt Concluſion is againſt the Appropriations of Churches to Monaſteries. The Second, is againſt the Preiſtood, or manner of Ordination in the Church of Rome. The Third, againſt the Celibacy of Prieſts, as inducing Sodomy. The Fourth, againſt Tranſubſtantiation of the Bread in the Sacrament into the true Body of Chriſt. The Fifth, is againſt the Superſtitious Exorciſms and Benedictions uſed in the Church over Wine, Bread, Water, Oyl, Salt, Wax, &c. The Sixth is againſt the Temporal Authority exerciſed by the Pope. The Seventh, againſt Prayers for the Dead, and Chanteries Founded for that Purpoſe. The Eighth, againſt Pilgrimages to, and Oblations and Prayers made at certain Croſſes and Images. The Ninth, againſt Auricular Confeſſion, and Abſolution by the Prieſt, as neceſſary to Salvation. The Tenth, is againſt killing Men in War, as contrary to the Goſpel. The Eleventh, againſt Vows of perpetual Continency made by Women. The Twelfth, againſt a multitude of Arts or Trades in the Kingdom, tending either to Luxury, or the Diſtruction of Men, ſuch as Goldſmiths, and Armourers, &c.

But tho' the greateſt part of theſe Concluſions are the ſame whic moſt Proteſtant Churches hold at this Day, yet it appears by th Tenth and Twelfth of them that the Perſon who drew them up held therein much the ſame Principles with our Modern Quaker
However, theſe and the foregoing Doctrines daily ſpreading, th Clergy at laſt obtain'd an Act of Parliament in the next Reign whereby all Perſons Convicted of Hereſie before their Ordinaries o Biſhops, ſhould be deliver'd over to the Secular Powers to be Burnt as I ſhall ſhew hereafter; if God grant me Life and Health, to perfec another Volume.

THE PREFACE TO THE APPENDIX.

SINCE I have already advertiſed the Reader in the Preface to the precedent Volume, of the Deſign of this Treatiſe, and the reaſon of its being made an Appendix, I ſhall here need to ſay the leſs concerning it; and therefore when I have anſwered ſome Objections that poſſibly may be made againſt the Performance it ſelf, I will conclude with ſhewing the uſefulneſs of it to ſuch as deſire to be throughly verſt in our Antient Conſtitution: For which end I have here fairly put together all that hath (ſo far as I can find) or may be further written or ſaid by both ſides, on that long diſputed Queſtion about the Antiquity of the Commons of England, their being ſummoned to Parliament.

And perhaps it may be asked me by ſome, that deſire to have no more knowledge in things of this nature, than what they think is abſolutely neceſſary for them not to appear groſly Ignorant, to what end or purpoſe I have given my ſelf the trouble of Collecting or Writing any thing on this Subject? Since the Commons being a neceſſary conſtituent part of Parliament, is ſo well ſettled by a long and uninterrupted Uſage of above four hundred Years, that there can be no poſſibility of calling that Matter into Queſtion, or ever laying them aſide hereafter; eſpecially now, when the Ballance of Property in Lands, and conſequently of Power, is lodged in the hands of the Gentlemen and Freeholders of the Kingdom.

I ſhall not deny what is here objected to be true, as to Matter of Fact; however, I muſt ſtill think that a Treatiſe of this nature is not unuſeful, nor unneceſſary, even at this time, ſince there has been, and is yet among us a ſort of Men of Arbitrary and Modern Principles, who maintain, that not only the Houſe of Commons, but even the whole Great Council of the Kingdom, or Parliamont, owes its very Being and Eſſence to the Grace and Favour of our Princes; and they may retrench the Power and Privileges of this Aſſembly;

THE PREFACE TO THE APPENDIX.

SINCE I have already advertiſed the Reader in the Preface to the precedent Volume, of the Deſign of this Treatiſe, and the reaſon of its being made an Appendix, I ſhall here need to ſay the leſs concerning it; and therefore when I have anſwered ſome Objections that poſſibly may be made againſt the Performance it ſelf, I will conclude with ſhewing the uſefulneſs of it to ſuch as deſire to be throughly verſt in our Antient Conſtitution: For which end I have here fairly put together all that hath (ſo far as I can find) or may be further written or ſaid by both ſides, on that long diſputed Queſtion about the Antiquity of the Commons of England, their being ſummoned to Parliament.

And perhaps it may be asked me by ſome, that deſire to have no more knowledge in things of this nature, than what they think is abſolutely neceſſary for them not to appear groſly Ignorant, to what end or purpoſe I have given my ſelf the trouble of Collecting or Writing any thing on this Subject? Since the Commons being a neceſſary conſtituent part of Parliament, is ſo well ſettled by a long and uninterrupted Uſage of above four hundred Years, that there can be no poſſibility of calling that Matter into Queſtion, or ever laying them aſide hereafter; eſpecially now, when the Ballance of Property in Lands, and conſequently of Power, is lodged in the hands of the Gentlemen and Freeholders of the Kingdom.

I ſhall not deny what is here objected to be true, as to Matter of Fact; however, I muſt ſtill think that a Treatiſe of this nature is not unuſeful, nor unneceſſary, even at this time, ſince there has been, and is yet among us a ſort of Men of Arbitrary and Modern Principles, who maintain, that not only the Houſe of Commons, but even the whole Great Council of the Kingdom, or Parliamont, owes its very Being and Eſſence to the Grace and Favour of our Princes; and they may retrench the Power and Privileges of this Aſſembly;

nay, omit to call it, when ever they in their Wiſdom ſhall ſo pleaſe; for they ſay the Legiſlative Authority of the Nation is veſted ſolely in the King, againſt whoſe Prerogative, as no Time can preſcribe, ſo no inferior Power can limit or controul; and as for ſuch Reſtrictions which ſome Kings have been pleaſed to lay upon themſelves, by Laws or Statutes of their own making, or ſufferance, thoſe can no longer oblige them, than they ſhall think them to conſiſt with the Weal and Safety of their Perſons and Government; of all which they are the only Judges, as being the ſole ſupream Power of the Kingdom. So that whenever any future King ſhall conceive that the appearance and acting of the Repreſentatives of the People of England in Parliament (whether Lords or Commons) is too great for their Prerogative, and inconſiſtent with their reſolved Monarchy; they may warrantably, by this their uncontrollable Authority (as theſe Gentlemen aſſert) either retrench their Power and Privileges, as I ſaid before; or elſe omitting to call them, may take the Government wholly into their own hands; ſo that the conſequence muſt be, that then they may make what Laws, and raiſe what Money they pleaſe without the People's conſent.

Nor can I ſee what other Deſign thoſe Gentlemen that have wrote ſo highly againſt the Antiquity of Parliaments, and eſpecially of the Houſe of Commons, could thereby have, but to give a juſt pretence to ſome Arbitrary Prince of putting all theſe Principles that have been laid down, into practice; and thereby to reduce our mixed and limited Monarchy into the like abſolute and deſpotick Tyranny that is now exerciſed in France.

Therefore to obviate and take off all ſuch Pretences and fallacious Arguments, the chief buſineſs of my Introduction to the firſt Volume of the Hiſtory of England, was, as you may ſee, to ſhew that the antient Government of this Nation was not an abſolute, but a limited Monarchy, from its very Inſtitution; and that our Engliſh Saxon Kings were elected by the Wittena Gemot or Parliament; and therefore that Great Council muſt conſequently have been before, or at leaſt as antient, as Kings themſelves; and as for the conſtituent Parts of that Aſſembly, it is granted on all hands, that the Biſhops, Earls, Thanes, (or Barons, as they were called after the coming in of the Normans) were always neceſſary Members thereof; and I hope I have alſo clear'd in the abovementioned Introduction, that the Commons diſtinct from the Higher Nobility, made a part of that great Repreſentative of the Nation: But this has been denied by Sir Henry Spelman in his Gloſſary, and by Mr. Prynne and Dr. Brady, in ſeveral Tracts that they have written to prove the ſummoning of the Commons to Parliament, to be no antienter than the 49th Year of Henry the Third; as the Doctor has endeavour'd to make out in his Anſwers to Mr. Petyt and Mr. Atwood, and alſo in his later Hiſtory of Boroughs, by many ſeeming Arguments and Authorities drawn from our Records and Hiſtories, that they were not again ſummoned till the 18th and 23d Years of the Reign of Edward I.

But ſince I do not think thoſe Reaſons true nor convincing; therefore, for the ſatisfaction of thoſe that are curious to know the Antient Form of our Government, I have here briefly ſet down what I could find made uſe of by any Authors, to prove, that the Commons, as well as the Biſhops and Temporal Lords, were a conſtituent part of our Great Councils or Parliaments, not only before, but alſo after the pretended Conqueſt by King William I. and therefore that the Commons can be no more omitted or left out of a full or compleat Parliament, than either of the other Eſtates; which I think may be very neceſſary to ſtop the Mouths and Pens of thoſe Men, who, upon theſe Principles, ſhall make any freſh Attempts to ſet up an Arbitrary and Deſpotick Power over this Free Nation: and I hope it may likewiſe be Inſtructive to thoſe Noblemen, Gentlemen, or Others, whoſe Intereſt it is to know the utmoſt that can be alledged on both ſides in this great and important Controverſy, which, I muſt grant, is ſomewhat intricate and obſcure, by reaſon of the ſilence of ſeveral of our Hiſtorians, and the loſs of the antient Writs of Summons to Parliament, beſides the Parliamentary Records themſelves, till the beginning of the Reign of Edward the Third: And I confeſs it is rendred yet more dark and perplexed, thro' the Prejudices and Artifices of ſome Writers of the contrary Opinion, who have uſed all their Skill and Cunning, not only to conceal, but to wreſt and pervert all Authorities that have been brought againſt their Notions, to a quite contrary ſenſe than ever they were intended; and for the truth of this I ſhall refer the Reader to the following Replies.

I confeſs I have gone ſomewhat farther than at firſt I deſigned in this Diſcourſe, which was principally for an Inquiry only into the Arguments brought by Mr. Prynne and Dr. Brady, concerning the Antiquity of the Commons, their being ſummoned to Parliament: Becauſe I have, ſince that, peruſed the Learned Dr. Wake's elaborate Work, entitled, The State of the Church and Clergy of England, in their Councils and Convocations, and there met with ſome Paſſages, wherein he, unhappily falling into Dr. Brady's falſe Notions, endeavours to make out, that the Commons, as well as the inferior Clergy, were not conſtantly ſummoned to Parliament, until the 23d Year of Edward the Firſt (tho' indeed he grants, that the Knights of Shires were once called up in the 18th Year of that King) and further takes upon him to Anſwer the Authorities that are found in ſome of our Hiſtorians to the contrary: which Anſwers, ſince they are not ſufficient to convince me, I preſumed he would not be diſpleaſed at my offering ſome ſhort Animadverſions upon them, which I have taken care to do with that Deference and juſt Reſpect as is due to that Reverend Author's great Learning and Character; and to whom I muſt own my ſelf very much beholden for that true light I have had into that before dark and obſcure Piece of Church-Hiſtory, concerning the difference between Synods, Councils, and Parliamentary Conventions, or Convocations; which he hath handled with that truth, perſpicuity, and exactneſs, that not only thoſe of his own Profeſſion, but all others who are lovers of Antiquity, and deſirous to have a through knowledge of this important Subject, ought to own themſelves highly obliged to his excellent Performance.

Before I conclude this Preface, I muſt alſo take notice of another thing that I foreſee may be further objected by thoſe of Dr. Brady's Opinion, againſt this Performance; which is, that I do not deal fairly in writing againſt that Induſtrious Author now deceas'd, who (they ſay) had he lived, would have given it a ſufficient reply. But to this I ſhall beg leave to anſwer, that altho' the Doctor died before the coming out of theſe Sheets, yet I had finiſhed the greateſt part of them in his Life-time, and had then taken care to pay him thoſe Regards that were due to his Learning, even for his, as well as my own Reputation; and now have treated his Memory with all becoming Obſervance, as one that is reſolved to avoid perſonal Reflections, as unworthy at any time to be uſed by Men of an Ingenuous Education: my Exceptions being againſt his Opinions, and not againſt his Perſon, of which I had but little knowledge; yet whether he would have made any Reply or no to this Diſcourſe, I muſt ſtill doubt, becauſe moſt of the Arguments and Authorities here made uſe of, were publiſhed long ago, on which he never thought fit to make any Animadverſions. However, ſince my Deſign in writing this Diſcourſe is purely to diſcover Truth, and not to maintain any Faction or Party, I ſhould be very glad if thoſe Gentlemen, to whom the Doctor has bequeathed his Notes and Manuſcripts, would be pleaſed, from them, to make what Replies they can to the Arguments and Authorities here produced; for thereby they may not only give us clearer light into this important Controverſy, but alſo may vindicate the Doctor's Reputation, in ſhewing us, that he wrote nothing, but what he found he had ſufficient Reaſon and Proofs for, to juſtifie himſelf: Nor can his Friends (as I conceive) run any hazard in ſo doing, becauſe whatſoever they publiſh in this kind, will no ways affect this preſent Eſtabliſhment, which is acknowledged on all hands to be ſufficiently ſettled by ſuch a continued Succeſſion of Years; ſo that it now ſeems rather a Queſtion relating to Antiquity, than to the preſent Conſtitution of the Government, which, I hope, no body will go about to alter, after ſo long an experience of its excellence and fitneſs for the Genius of this Nation.

But to come to the laſt Head I deſign'd to ſpeak of, viz. the uſefulneſs of a thorough underſtanding of this Subject, eſpecially for all thoſe that are or ſhall be imployed as Parliament-men, or be put into other Civil Offices of the Government; and here I ſhall only ſay, that unleſs they are ſufficiently inſtructed in what is our Original Conſtitution, and the antient Rights and Privileges thereof, they can never be able to defend it as they ought, againſt thoſe that ſhall make it their buſineſs to cry down this excellent frame of Government, as if it were inconſiſtent with Monarchy: Nor indeed can the Perſons above-mentioned have that real value and eſteem for an Inſtitution, which (as ſome affirm) proceeded but a few Centuries ago, from the pure Bounty and free-will of our Kings, as they muſt have for the ſame Conſtitution, if proved to be as antient as Kingly Government it ſelf.

The Appendix.

A Brief and Impartial Diſquiſition into that Great Queſtion, Whether the Commons of England had ever any other Repreſentatives in Parliament, than the Tenants in Capite, before the 49*th of* Henry the Third? wherein all the Arguments that have been publiſhed in ſeveral Treatiſes on this Subject, are fairly repreſented; together with ſuch Anſwers and Replies as can be given to them.

IN the enſuing Diſcourſe I ſhall perſue this Method; firſt, Set down the Arguments and Authorities that either have been, or may be made uſe of from our Hiſtorians, ſince the pretended Conqueſt; as alſo from the Great Charter granted in the ſecond and ninth Years of Henry the Third; and likewiſe from Preſcription out of the Antient Regiſter of Writs, to prove, that the Commons of England appeared in Parliament by their Repreſentatives choſen by themſelves long before the 49th of Henry the Third.

In the ſecond place I ſhall prove, that the Commons were repreſented by Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, from the 49th of that King, to the 18th of Edward the Firſt, againſt Dr. Brady's confident Aſſertion to the contrary.

Thirdly, That the People or Commons of England have always claim'd this Right by Preſcription, i. e. Time beyond Memory, of being ſo Repreſented; and that this Claim hath been allowed by the King and his Council; as alſo by all the Biſhops and Peers of this Realm in Parliament.

Fourthly, I ſhall give you the Teſtimonies of divers Learned Antiquaries, all of this Opinion, that it was the Antient Right of the Commons of England by Preſcription, both before and ſince the Norman Entrance.

In the ſecond Part I ſhall faithfully ſet down the Arguments produced by Sir Henry Spelman, in the ſecond Volume of his Gloſſary; by Mr. Prynne, in his Plea for the Lords; and by Dr. Brady, in his Introduction to the Hiſtory of England; and ſhall alſo add thereunto, as briefly as I can, ſuch Anſwers as may be given to thoſe Arguments and Authorities, either from Printed or Manuſcript Hiſtorians; and eſpecially from that which they moſt inſiſt upon, viz. the Great Charter of King John.

There are likewiſe divers other Authorities and Arguments draw from Hiſtory and Records, which Dr. Brady hath made uſe of, to prov that the Commons, as now underſtood, were not ſummon'd to Par liament, from the 49th of Henry the Third, to the 18th of Edwa the Firſt; which being his own particular Opinion, and he the fir broacher of it, I have anſwered it by it ſelf.

And now having laid down the Method I intend to take in th following Diſcourſe, I ſhall, in the next place, proceed to the Ar guments and Authorities themſelves, whereby it may be prov'd, th the Commons of England had Repreſentatives in Parliament befor the 49th of Henry the Third. And here I deſire the Reader to tak notice, that the Queſtion between the Doctor and Me, is not, Whe ther the Commons were not ſome way or other repreſented in Par liament? for he himſelf grants, that they were repreſented by th Tenants in Capite, tho' juſt before he ſays, that before that time th Body of the Commons of England, or Freemen (as now underſtood collectively taken, had not any ſhare or Votes in making of Laws fo the Government of the Kingdom, &c. which certainly ſuppoſe that they were repreſented one way or other: But in his Anſwer t Mr. Petyt he departs from this Conceſſion, and ſays, That the Fi deles mention'd in a Record of King John (who had uſually been call'd to Great Councils) were Tenants in Capite, but not Barons and only repreſented themſelves, and not the Commons; yet a few Pages further he affirms, † that other Tenants that held of the Te nants in Capite by Knight's Service, were bound by their Acts, in a Great Council or Parliament; but how they could be ſo obliged unleſs they were ſome way or other repreſented, I can by no means underſtand. But Sir Henry Spelman, in his Gloſſary, Tit. Parliamen tum grants, what the Dr. denies, in theſe words, Et conſentire Inferior quiſque viſus eſt in Perſona Domini ſui Capitalis, prout hodie per Procuratores Comitatus vel Burgi, quos in Parliamentis Knights and Burgeſſes, appellamus, i. e. Every inferior Tenant ſeem'd to conſent (viz. in a great Council) in the Perſon of his Capital Lord, as they do at this Day, by the Repreſentatives of Counties or Burroughs which we call Knights and Burgeſſes in Parliament: But let the Doctor contradict himſelf as he pleaſes, he hath granted enough for our purpoſe, that his Tenants in Capite were not Barons; and if ſo, ſome of them muſt be meer Commoners; and ſurely then, there were Commons in Great Councils or Parliaments, before the 49th of Henry the Third.

† P. 74.

I ſhall now proceed to the Authorities themſelves, for the proving of the firſt Propoſition; and here I deſire the Reader would call to Mind, that in my Introduction to the firſt Volume I made it plain, by divers expreſs Teſtimonies, that the Commons had their Repreſentatives in Parliament under the Engliſh Saxon Kings; and that they did not loſe it by the Doctor's pretended Conqueſt of William the Firſt. I have there alſo prov'd, by * Sulcardus's Manuſcript Chartulary of the antient Monuments and Charters belonging to the Abby of Weſtminſter, in A. D. 1071, being the fourth Year of that King's Reign, that the antient Privileges and Liberties of that Church were confirm'd by a General Synod or Common Council of the Realm, the Concluſion to the Charter then ſeal'd by the King

* In Bib. Cotton.

King, expreſly telling us, that there then appear'd thereat many illuſtrious Perſons and chief Men of the Kingdom, whoſe Names, tho' omitted, yet were Conſenters and Witneſſes to this Confirmation of the Privileges and Liberties of that antient Monaſtery; and theſe were ſummon'd by the Royal Authority from divers Counties and Cities, to this General Synod held at the Abbey abovementioned; of which I ſhall ſay no more, but refer the Reader to the Latin Original at the latter-end of the Introduction to my firſt Volume; where he will alſo find an Anſwer to Dr. Brady's Objections, who will not allow the Perſons there mention'd to have been Repreſentatives of Counties or Cities, but only Spiritual Perſons ſent up from the ſeveral Dioceſſes and Cities of England, to repreſent the Inferior Clergy in a Synod that was then held. But I ſhall ſay no more concerning it in this place, having, I hope, already ſufficiently anſwer'd that Cavil.

In the 19th Year of this King, A. D. 1086, as * Florence of Worceſter relates, he commanded, That the Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, and Sheriffs, with their Knights, ſhould all meet Him on the firſt of the Kalends of Auguſt at Salisbury, where, when they came, He made them and their Knights to ſwear Fealty to Him againſt all Men. This was undoubtedly a Great Council, to which not only the Great Men above-mentioned, and the Sheriffs were ſummon'd, but Knights or Tenants by Military Service, who were certainly meer Commoners, ſo that this Council did not conſiſt of Tenants in Capite alone.

* Ad hunc An.

After this, I confeſs, we do not meet with any expreſs mention of Commons to have been preſent in any Great Council or Parliament in thoſe Times, which might however be included under the general words of Principes & Nobiles Regni, as they are often mention'd in Eadmerus and other Authors: But when his Brother Henry I. was elected King, by a Great Council of the whole Kingdom, He granted his Charter of Liberties to the Clergy, Nobility, and People of England; to which in the Copy of the Red Book in the Exchequer, as alſo in † Brompton's Chronicle, theſe are ſet down as preſent and Witneſſes at his Coronation, Teſtibus Archiepiſcopis, Epiſcopis, Comitibus, Baronibus, & Vicecomitibus, & Optimatibus totius Regni, quando Coronatus fui; where, beſides the Earls and Barons, the Sheriffs of England, and the chief Men were preſent; and by theſe Optimates, I ſuppoſe, the inferior Military Tenants are underſtood; ſince the word Barones then took in all the Tenants in Capite, both great and ſmall, as Mr. Selden hath prov'd in his Titles of Honour, p. 649; and as Dr. Brady himſelf confeſſes, in his Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, p. 102. Gloſſ. p. 28, 29.

Vid. Q. Eadmerus.

† Col. 1022.

And this too further appears from * Florence of Worceſter, and Eadmerus, in their Relations concerning that great Council held by this King, A. D. 1116, at Salisbury, for the declaring of his Son William his Heir, and to make all the People of England of any Note, to ſwear Allegiance to him; and tho' both theſe Authors differ in their Expreſſions, yet they agree in the Thing: The former of them calls it, Conventio Optimatum & Baronum totius Angliæ; and the latter ſtiles it, Abbatum, & Principum totius Regni, apud Seruberiam Cogenti eos illuc Sanctione Regis: From which two Hiſtorians I ſhall only obſerve, that not only the Biſhops, Lords, and Tenants in Capite, are, by them, comprehended under the Titles of

* Ad hunc An.

Optimatum & Baronum & Principum, but their inferior Tenants likewiſe, who were meer Commoners; and the Knights of Shires, whenever they were ſummon'd, might as well be comprehended under the ſame general Terms; ſo that if we had not other Authors to make it out, it would ſeem as if no more than the Biſhops and Great Lords of the Kingdom had been ſummon'd to this Council: But William of Malmesbury (an Author who lived at that very time) is more particular, for under this Year (being the 16th of this King's Reign) he tells us, that at this Council at Salisbury, not only the Biſhops, Lords, and Tenants in Capite, but alſo all the Freemen of England, of whatſoever Order, Dignity, or Condition, or of whatſoever Lord they held, were oblig'd to ſwear Fealty to Prince William, the King's Son, being then ſcarce twelve Years of Age. The original Latin runs thus: Willielmo Filio ſuo, cum, viz. 12 Annorum eſſet, omnes Libri Homines &c. cujuſcunque ordinis & Dignitatis, cujuſcunque Domino Fideles manibus & Sacramento ſe dedere coacti ſunt.

And that this was a General Council of the whole Kingdom, appears by the Teſtimony of * Polidore Virgil, who calls it a 'Common Council of the Kingdom, wherein the Controverſy between the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York was debated; and the latter refuſing to yield to the former, it very much incenſed King Henry. And in this Council, the ſame Author affirms, that all the chief Men of the Kingdom ſwore Fealty to the King's Son, in a ſet form of words: For (ſays he) till this time the Engliſh Kings were very ſeldom uſed to conſult their People in a Council; ſo that this Inſtitution may be moſt properly aſcribed to this King, becauſe that for the future they conſtantly reſolved to do nothing for the well-government and conſervation of the Commonweal, without firſt conſulting this Council. But tho' this Author is certainly miſtaken in making our Great Councils or Parliaments no antienter than this King's Reign; yet he is ſo far in the right, that this Aſſembly at Salisbury was a General Council of the whole Kingdom.

* Ad hunc An.

But ſince the Gentlemen of Dr. Brady's Opinion will not grant, (tho' they cannot deny the truth of the Matter of Fact, that there were ſuch Aſſemblies in the Reigns of William and Henry the Firſt, as the two laſt mention'd) that they were Common-Councils of the Kingdom, properly ſo called, but were only Occaſional Conventions or Aſſemblies, ſummon'd by the King for a particular end and purpoſe, viz. the former to do Homage and ſwear Allegiance to King William Himſelf; the latter to do the like to the young Prince, Son to King Henry, which was, however, not to take effect till after the Death of his Father; and further, that the ſubordinate or Feudatory Tenants, who, together with the Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, and other Tenants in Capite, were preſent at theſe Aſſemblies, were not there to do any Parliamentary Buſineſs, as to give Money or Advice, and Conſent in enacting of Laws, but only to make all ſorts of Men, who held by Military Tenure, to recognize and ſwear to maintain their Titles; and tho' that in this Aſſembly or Council at Salisbury there might be other Buſineſs diſpatched (as the Hiſtorians relate) yet this was only Occaſional and by the bye; and that none, except the Biſhops, Earls, and greater Barons, had any thing to do in that Judgment and Determination, concerning the buſineſs of the two Archbiſhops; as the Commons have not any thing to do at this Day in Matters of Judicature.

This Objection, tho' it ſeems ſomewhat weighty, I think, may admit of the following Anſwer: In the firſt place, I muſt here inſiſt upon the Proofs I have already brought in the Introduction to my firſt Volume, that the inferior Tenants or Thanes, below the degree of the Earls and chief Thanes, were conſtituent Members of the Engliſh-Saxon Great Councils, and that they continued to be ſo after the pretended Conqueſt, I have already fully made to appear in the beginning of this Diſcourſe, which alſo may be further clear'd up by the Charter of William the Firſt, by which it is Ordained, Commanded, and Granted by Him, that all Freemen of the whole Monarchy of his Kingdom may have and hold their Lands and Poſſeſſions well and in Peace, free from all unjuſt Exactions and Tallage, ſo as nothing be exacted or taken unleſs their Free Services, which of right they ought and are bound to perform, and as it was appointed to them, and given and granted to them by Him, as a perpetual Right of Inheritance by the Common Council of the whole Kingdom: From whence we may collect, that theſe Freemen mention'd in this Law, were not to be taxed without their own conſent, or that of their Repreſentatives in that Council; and therefore it will follow, that the Great Councils of thoſe times did conſiſt (or at leaſt ought to have conſiſted) of divers other Perſons beſides the Prelates, Lords, and Tenants in Capite, ſince the Freemen of England could not All be repreſented by them; and therefore theſe Aſſemblies holden by King William and Henry the Firſt were not extraordinary Conventions, but were Great or Common Councils of the Kingdom, properly ſo call'd, ſeeing otherwiſe it had been much eaſier for thoſe Kings to have iſſued out an Edict, that all the Subjects of England, of any Note or Condition, ſhould have taken the Oath of Allegiance to themſelves, or their next Heir, before certain Commiſſioners in their ſeveral Counties, rather than to have put the whole Kingdom to the trouble and expence of meeting and performing it in Perſon at one particular place.

See this Charter inter Leges Willielmi R. at the end of Lambert*'s* Saxon Laws. As alſo in the Append. to the General Hiſtory, Vol. II.

Vide J. 2.

But ſince Dr. B. in his Anſwer to Mr. P. will by no means allow this Law of William I. to be underſtood in that ſenſe, as if all the Freemen of England, of whatſoever Tenure, had any hand in making Laws or granting Taxes in thoſe Times, I ſhall give you the Sum of his Arguments againſt it. Firſt, he ſays, that there were no Engliſhmen at that time in the Common Council of the Kingdom, their Lands being already given away to the Conqueror's Soldiers and Followers. And in the next place he affirms, that the Freemen mention'd in this Charter, were not ordinary Freemen, by whatſoever Tenure, but only Tenants in Capite, or other Military Tenants under them; and whom they repreſented, by giving Taxes and making Laws for them, whenever the King pleas'd to ſummon the Tenants in Capite to his Great Council or Parliament. And Thirdly, That theſe Liberi Homines, or Freemen, were only ſuch Military Tenants, he endeavours to prove, from the 58th Law of this King, which he thus tranſlates; We Ordain alſo, and firmly Command, that all Earls, Barons, Knights, and their Servants, or Eſcuyers, and all Freemen of our whole Kingdom be always fitted with Horſe and Arms,

B. Anſw. P. p. 17, 18.

Arms, as they ought to be, and always ready to perform their whole Service to Us, when there ſhall be need, which they ought to do, according to, and by reaſon of their Fees and Tenures, as We ordain'd by the Common Council of the whole Kingdom: And then he makes this Comment upon it. Here all the Freemen of his Kingdom were to perform their Military Services with Horſe and Arms, according to their Fees and Tenures; therefore they were Tenants in Military Service (which in thoſe Times were the only Freemen, and that Service the onle Free-Service) which were meant in this Law; and how different they were from our ordinary Freeholders at this Day, (for whom neither of theſe Laws were made) I leave to the Judgment of every Ingenuous Reader.

I ſhall now reply to what the Doctor hath here too raſhly aſſerted; Firſt, he is miſtaken in ſo poſitively affirming, that theſe Laws no ways concern'd the Engliſh, when they were firſt made, ſince, for ought he knew, they were enacted; (for there is no date to them) within the firſt four Years of King William's Reign; and then the Doctor himſelf acknowledges, in his Anſwer to Mr. Cook's Argumentum ante Normanicum, as alſo in his Hiſtory, that the old Engliſh Proprietors were not at that time turn'd out of their Eſtates; and that the major part of them were not ſo at all, I think I have ſufficiently made out in the Introduction to my laſt Volume of the General Hiſtory of England: But this is only by the bye; the main Queſtion is, Who theſe Freemen were that are mention'd in both theſe Laws? that they were not only Tenants in Capite, or Military Tenants, appears by the very words here produced by the Doctor, where the Univerſi Liberi homines, or all the Freemen put after all the other Orders of Men (which comprehend all Tenants in Capite, and by Military Service, by the words Barones, Milites & Servientes, i. e. thoſe that ſerv'd under them) muſt be of a more extenſive ſignification, or elſe they need not have been put there at all; and that the Tenants of whatſoever Tenure, provided they were not Villains, were reckon'd amongſt the Freemen of the Kingdom, appears by this place in Fleta, where ſpeaking of the King's Tenants in Antient Demeſne, he ſays, 'That in Mannors of this kind, belonging to the King, there were Freemen or Freeholders, who being caſt out of their Eſtates by ſome more powerful Lords, were forced to receive them again in Villainage; and becauſe ſuch kind of Tenants are known to be Tillers of the King's Lands, therefore it is provided, that they ſhould be acquitted from performing any Suits to the County or Hundred Courts, whoſe Aſſembly or Meeting they called Soka; and hence it is they are ſtil'd Sockmen; and that ſuch Sockmen were alſo accounted *Freemen. See Spelman's Gloſſ. Tit. Sockman, where he ſays thus, Socmanus in Natura Brevium (ſub Brevi de Recto) propriè talis eſt, qui liber eſt, & tenet de Rege, ſeu de alio Domino in Antiquo Dominico terras ſuas ſeu Tenementa in Villenagio. In Libro Sancti Albani Tit. of any other Lord Lands or Tenements in antient Demeſne by Villainage. So in the Book of St. Alban's, Tit. Houcton Cap. I. All the Free and Cuſtomary Tenants held the Mannor of Houcton of the King in Demeſne, and acquitted their Tenements by the Service of the Plough: From whence it appears, that theſe Sockmen were Freemen; and if theſe Socage Tenants in antient Demeſne were Freemen, no doubt but all other Socage Tenants were ſo too. And that not only Tenants by Military Service, but all Others of whatſoever Tenure were reckon'd among the Freemen of the Kingdom, who were bound to provide themſelves with Horſe and Arms, appears from that Statute or Aſſize of Arms made by King Henry the Second, whereby every Lay-Freeman, who had ſixteen Marks Rent, was to have a Coat of Mail, a Helmet, and a Sword; and every ſuch Freeman of ten Marks, the other Arms therein mention'd.

But ſince the * Doctor affirms, that ſoon after or near the Conqueſt there were very few or no great Socagers, that is, ſuch as held Eſtates in Socage; I muſt beg his Pardon if I am of a different Opinion; and therefore ſhall be very glad to be ſatisfied by any of his Friends, (ſince he himſelf is dead) by what other Tenure theſe following Freeholders held their Lands. Firſt, All ſuch as held of the King, or of any Abbot, Biſhop or Great Lord, Lands in Alodio, that is, diſcharged of all Services except the bare Tenure only. Secondly, Such as held of the King by petty Sergeanty, as yielding Him an Arrow, a pair of Spurs, or the like, or by being his Huntſmen or Faulkners; of which there are not a few mention'd in Domeſday-Book. Thirdly, Such as held of ſome Honour or Caſtle of the King's in Fee Farm, that is, paying a certain Annual Rent. Fourthly, Such as held Lands of the King, or of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Biſhop of Rocheſter, and other Lords in Gavel-kind, of which Tenure were antiently all the Lands in Kent, as alſo a great deal in Worceſter-ſhire, Hereford-ſhire, and the Marches of Wales; as the Ingenuous Mr. Sylas Taylor hath very well prov'd in his Diſcourſe of Gavel-kind. Fifthly, All Tenants of ſuch Abbots, Priors, Deans, and Chapters of Cathedral Churches, as held in Frank-Almoigne, and not by Knights Service in chief, and their Tenants in free Socage, paying Rents and Fines; or elſe ſuch Services as thoſe Eccleſiaſtical Bodies, would let them out at, either in Fee, or elſe for Lives. And, Laſtly, Such Cities and ancient Boroughs of the Kingdom, as London, York, &c. which being places of Trade, and Riches held of the King, or elſe of ſome Biſhop, Abbot, or Great Lord, either in Socage or Burgage-Tenure; nor could they be legally Taxed de Alto & Baſſo, at the Will of the King or other Lord, as the Doctor in divers places aſſerts. All theſe, if well conſider'd, will be found to have enjoy'd at leaſt a fourth, if not a third part of the Lands of the whole Nation; and not holding their Eſtates by Knight's Service, they could never be taxed in Parliament by the Tenants in Capite, who were not their Landlords, and therefore could no ways repreſent them, according to Sir H. Spelman's and Dr. Brady's Hypotheſis, that the Tenants in Capite gave Taxes and made Laws for the whole Nation.

This, tho' it may ſeem a digreſſion, yet indeed is not ſo, ſeeing it will ſerve to give the Reader a great deal of Light to what folfollows, and ſhew him the neceſſity of ſuppoſing ſome other Repreſentatives, not only for the inferior Tenants in Capite themſelves, but for all the reſt of the People above-mention'd.

I ſhall now proceed to other Citations out of our antient Hiſtories; I confeſs the confus'd Reign of King Stephen doth not afford us many direct Authorities, yet Florence of Worceſter, under A. D. 1138. tells us, that this King held a Council at Northampton, in which Thurſtin, Archbiſhop of York preſided, the Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, and all the Nobles of the Kingdom being preſent, under which laſt words, Nobiles quique put after Barones in the Latin, may be very well underſtood the Nobiles minores, or Repreſentatives of the Commons; ſo likewiſe the ſame Author tells us of a Council held the next Year coram Primoribus Angliæ, before the chief Men of England; under which Term, that more than the Great Barons and Tenants in Capite may be included, I have prov'd in another † place; the like I may affirm of ſome other Councils of his Time, which are * ſaid to be held by the Biſhops, Earls, and the reſt of the Optimates; under which Term I ſhall ſhew the beſt of the Commoners under the degree of Lords may be underſtood.

† Vid. Introduct. to the 1ſt Vol.

* Chron. Norman ad A. D. 1152.

I ſhall now proceed to the moſt ſettled Reign of Henry the Second, who in his tenth Year A. D. 1164, held that famous Council at Clarendon, where the two Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York, with the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and chief Men of the Kingdom (in Latin) Proceres Regni were preſent, and who all Recognized the Conſtitutions there propos'd by the King, and that under the word Proceres, not only the Tenants in Capite, but their Inferior Tenants, being meer Commoners, are comprehended, I ſhall prove hereafter.

The next Council I ſhall inſiſt upon is, that which was held by this King at Gaitington, A. D. 1188, which as † Hoveden relates, conſiſted of Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, and many Others, as well Clercs as Laymen; the words in Latin are, Et aliorum multorum tam Clericorum quam Laicorum; where by the Clercs or Clergymen are to be underſtood the Inferior Clergy, as Deans and Arch-Deacons, and by the Laymen the Repreſentatives of the Commons put after the Barones; and in this Council was granted a Tenth of all moveable Goods for the Relief of the Holy Land.

And that by theſe many others muſt be underſtood, not the Tenants in Capite ſeems evident, becauſe they were then reckon'd among the Barons, as appears by the Conſtitutions of the Council of Clarendon, cap. xi. printed in Dr. Brady's Appendix, p. 43.

As for the Reign of King Richard the Firſt, there were not many Common Councils or Parliaments held in it, by reaſon of his long abſence from England; but in thoſe few that were ſummon'd after his return, it is evident, there were Others beſides the Biſhops and Lords: the Annals of Margan-Abby being an antient Welch-Chronicle ſuppos'd to be written about the middle of King Henry the Third's Reign, ſpeaking of King John's Coronation, A.D. 1199, ſays, He was Crown'd contrary to the Judgment of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Et omnium aliorum Magnatum Regni Angliæ, i. e. and all the other Great Men of the Kingdom of England, which was paſs'd at Nottingham before King Richard and his Brother, where he was adjudg'd and diſinherited for Treaſon.

Here by the Aliorum Magnatum may very well be underſtood, at leaſt the Knights of Shires, who are often ſtiled Magnates in our antient Parliamentary Records. So likewiſe in * Hoveden we find the Aſſize or Crown-Laws concerning Foreſts and other things, are ſaid to be made by the King, with the conſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, & Militum, i. e. of the Knights, (or Men at leaſt that held by Military Tenue.)

* Pag. 445.

Againſt which Authorities thoſe of the contrary Opinion do object, that by the words aliorum Magnatum, in the firſt Citation, are to be underſtood the leſs Tenants in Capite, as different from the greater Barons; and that the word Militum in the Title to thoſe Laws coming after Barones are meant the ſame ſort of Perſons.

To this it may be reply'd, that ſhould theſe words be admitted in this ſenſe, it would be a needleſs recital of the ſame Order or Degree of Men, ſince Mr. Selden in his Titles of Honour has prov'd, that till the Great Charter granted by King John, all the Tenants in Capite, as well Great as Small, were reckon'd alike under the Title of Barons, as I ſhall prove more at large hereafter.

I come now to the Reign of King John, who was † elected by a Great Council of the whole Kingdom, conſiſting of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and an infinite number of other Nobles; and this He himſelf acknowledges in one of his Charters, that He ſucceeded to the Crown by Hereditary Right, Mediante tàm Cleri quàm Populi unanimi conſenſu & favore, i. e. by the unanimous Conſent and Favour of the Clergy and People contributing thereunto. So likewiſe in a Charter on the * Rolls in the Tower, whereby He ſettles a Jointure on his ſecond Wife Queen Iſabel, who, in the beginning of it is ſaid to be Crown'd Queen, by the common Aſſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and Clergy and People of the Land, that is, in a Great Council conſiſting of the ſeveral Orders or Eſtates: To theſe Authorities I know the Doctor's Friends will ſay, that by the multitude of Nobles mention'd by this Hiſtorian, the leſs ſort of Nobility or Tenants in Capite are to be underſtood, who then, together with their Military Tenants that follow'd them to ſuch Great Aſſemblies, made up a very great Number, and yet was far from an Infinite Multitude, as this Author calls it by way of an Hyperbole. And as for the words Clerus and Populus in the Record laſt cited, † Dr. Brady hath proved in his Gloſſary, that they ſignify no more than the Clergy and Laity in general, and by the Populus in this place is meant no more than Plebs, by which the Doctor proves from Matt. Weſtminſter, that the Lay-Earls and Barons are to be underſtood, and not the Commons; and as for Clerus and Populus put after Barones, as the word Clerus may ſignifie ſome of the Inferior Clergy, ſuch as Abbots and Priors as held in Capite; ſo likewiſe by the word Populus are meant no others, than the leſs Lay-Tenants in Capite.

† Tit. Clerus & Populus.

To this it may be reply'd, that the words Infinita multitudo Nobilium, tho' taken Hyperbolically, yet cannot mean the leſs Tenants in Capite alone; for they went at that time under the Name of Barons; and if their immediate Tenants under them are taken into the Account, the conſequence will be, that they had as much Right as their Lords to appear at this Great Council held at King

John's

John's Election, becauſe there lay no obligation upon them by reaſon of that Solemnity, to put themſelves to the trouble and expence of being preſent at this Coronation if they had no Right to be there.

As for the Words Clerus and Populus in the Record, what is comprehended under the former of theſe Terms, I ſhall not concern my ſelf to decide; only it is certain it was an Order of Clergymen diſtinct from the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and ſo by the ſame Reaſon the Word Populus muſt mean another Order of Laymen from the Earls and Barons, or elſe this Word would be in vain, and to no purpoſe in this Record; but that Populus ever ſignified the leſs Tenants in Capite alone, the * Doctor cannot make out in his Gloſſary; tho' he allows that under the Word Vulgus, (which he grants to be the ſame with Populus) when put in oppoſition to Clerus, the Temporal Earls and Barons with the Commons were underſtood in the Reign of Edward I. So likewiſe in the † next Page he grants, that inthe Thirty fourth of the ſame King, the Word Populus comprehended the Earls, Barons, with the other Great Men, and the Knights of Shires, and not the Tenants in Capite alone; and why this Word ſhould not have a like ſignification in this Record, I can ſee no reaſon.

† Ib. pag. 26.

In the ſixth Year of his Reign, in a * Record cited by Mr. Selden in his Titles of Honour, we find certain Laws made by this King, for the Defence of the Kingdom, by the common Aſſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Omniúmq; Fidelium noſtorum Angliæ, i. e. of all his Faithſul Subjects, by which ſeems to be meant the Repreſentatives of the Commons; and the Annals of Waverly under the Year 1207, tell us, that there was a great Council held this Year at London, about the beginning of January, at which were preſent, the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls and Barons, & Magnates Regni, i. e. the Great Men of the Kingdom; wherein he required the Biſhops and Abbots to permit the Beneficed Clergy to give him a certain part of their yearly Income. Now that by the Magnates Regni, or Great Men of the Kingdom, here put after Barones, the Knights of Shires may very well be underſtood, I ſhall make out from divers Precedents: Firſt, among the † Records of the Exchequer, in the Reign of Edward I. the Knights of Shires, and Barons of the Cinque-Ports are called Magnates; and in an old Printed * Book of Statutes in Latin and French, as alſo in Raſtal's Statutes, 15 Ed. III. Cap. 4. there are mention'd, the Prelates, Earls, Barons, Knights, and other Grandz, i. e. Great Men of every County: And ſo likewiſe the Statute de Servientibus, in the 25*th* of Ed. III. was made by the aſſent of the ſaid Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men of the ſaid Communalty there aſſembled; ther yet, in the Statute 27 Ed. III. the Ordinances of the Staple are ſaid to be made, after good deliberation had with the Prelates, Dukes, Earls, Barons, and Great Men of the Counties, of each County one, and as many for the Commons and Cities and Boroughs of the Realm.

Payments to the Roman Gourt, which ſeems moſt likely to be done in Parliament, tho' the Proceedings are now loſt. I know thoſe of the contrary Opinion will ſtrive to evade the Force of this laſt Authority, in ſaying that by Omnes Fideles, here mentioned after Barones, we ſhould underſtand the leſs Tenants in Capite; but to this I anſwer, that this is only gratis dictum, and we may as well deny, as they affirm it; for the tho' word Fideles is ſometimes taken for the King's Tenants or Vaſſals, yet it alſo extends to thoſe of others, beſides the King's: Thus in the above-mentioned Authority from Malmesbury, concerning the Great Council at Salisbury it is ſaid, that cujuſcunque Domini Fideles, the Tenants of whatſoever Lords were made to ſwear Fealty to the King's Son: but that the word Fideles, even in this King's Reign, muſt have been of a like comprehenſive ſignification, and mean all the Feudatary Tenants in England, appears by this King's * Writ of the 15th of his Reign, directed thus, Rex Baronibus, Militibus & Omnibus Fidelibus totius Angliæ, ſalutem: By which laſt Expreſſion Dr. Brady would have underſtood only the King's Tenants in Capite, which is very improbable; for if they are all comprehended under Milites, as the Dr. in other places avers, then theſe Fideles in this Record will ſignify the ſame thing; but theſe ſhort Writs did not uſe to abound in vain and unneceſſary words.

* Rot. Pet. 15. Johan. p. 2. m. 2.

I ſhall now paſs to the 15th Year of this King, where we find in Matt. Paris, that all the Nobles and Freemen of England being aſſembled at Runnemede, King John agreed to grant them the Great Charter of Liberties and Foreſts; the Title to this Agreement being ſtill upon Record, runs thus in Engliſh.

> The Agreement between John, King of England, on the one part, and Robert Fitzwalter, Mareſchal of the Army of God and the Holy Church of England, and Richard de Clare, *with five other Earls and ſix Barons there named, together with other Earls, Barons, and * Freemen of the whole Kingdom, on the other part*, &c.

Rot. Clauſe 17 Johan. M. 2. Dorſ.

* Liberi Homines

And tho' this Aſſembly was not call'd by the King's Summons, but met there againſt his Will, yet it is look'd upon by all our Hiſtorians as a Common Council of the Kingdom, conſiſting of the Nobility, Gentry, and Freemen of England, who were there preſent in their own Perſons, to conſent and accept of this Charter, which the King was then ready to ſeal to them.

But ſince Dr. Brady will not allow this to be a Great or Common Council of the Kingdom, any farther than in reſpect to the Great Lords and Tenants in Capite, I ſhall give you his Exceptions againſt it in his own words. In his Anſwer to † Mr. Atwood's Jani Anglorum, &c. where he will not allow that Gentleman's ſenſe of the words Liberi homines, that they comprehend all the Freemen or Free-Tenants of what condition ſoever, but that the Liberi Homines mention'd in the Title to this Charter, were the ſame whom the King calls Liberi Homines noſtri in the Charter it ſelf, and to whom He there immediately grants ſeveral Relaxations of the Rigid Feudal Tenure, by which the Doctor ſuppoſes it to be apparent, that theſe Liberi Homines were Tenants in Capite, and then refers to his Gloſſary for the farther explication of theſe words, which we ſhall alſo examine by and by.

But I ſhall ſhew, that the Doctor is not only out himſelf, but, I fear, wilfully miſguides his Readers by this bold Aſſertion; for I leave it to any Perſon that will but read over King John's Charter, as it is in Matt. Paris, and will alſo take the pains to compare it with two Original Charters in the Cottonian Library, and in the Archives of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, with the various Readings of it, as they are publiſhed in the Appendix to the ſecond Volume of the General Hiſtory of England: I ſay, I leave it to any Perſon to find (if he can) the word noſtri join'd with Liberi Homines in the whole Charter, or the Additions to them, that were left out in the confirmation of it by Henry the Third: 'Tis true, in the ſecond Article or Chapter, the King grants, Liberis Hominibus Regni noſtri, &c. omnes Libertates ſubſcriptas, where 'tis plain, the word noſtri muſt agree with Regni, and not with Liberis Hominibus; but in no other Chapter or Article of this Charter can I find theſe words in the Plural, but only in the ſingular number, and then they are no Relaxations of the Rigid Feudal Tenures, as the Doctor will have them, but they extend to all the Freemen of the Nation in general, of whatſoever Tenure or Condition, as in Cap. 26. Liber Homo non amercietur pro parvo delicto, &c. Cap. 34. Si aliquis Liber Homo capiatur, vel impriſonetur aut diſſeiſetur, &c. indeed the 26th Chapter, which begins, Nullus Liber Homo de cætero & amplius alicui det vel vendat de terra ſua, &c. does extend to Tenants by Knight's Service in general, but not to Tenants in Capite in particular.

Let us now look into his * Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, where you will find he falls a Peg lower; and there, notwithſtanding his former poſitive Aſſertion, that the Liberi Homines, mention'd in the Title of this Charter, were only the Tenants in Capite, in the former Treatiſe he allows the Liberi Homines mention'd in the Conqueror's Magna Charta to be ſuch as held in Military Service, tho' under other Lords beſides the King. And in his Gloſſary, p. 51, he ſays, They were the other Tenants in Capite, beſides the Barons, or at leaſt their Retinue, the Tenants in Military Service, who were at Runnemede when this Agreement was made: The reſt, who were only their Followers and helped to augment the noiſe, were not Law-makers; for 'tis not probable (ſays the Doctor) that thoſe Men that had the Force of the Nation, would permit Men of ſmall Reputation to ſhare with them in Law-making; thoſe that had the Power of this or any other Nation de facto, always did give Laws, and Tax the People.

In reply to this, I cannot but obſerve the Doctor's plain contradiction of himſelf; for whereas in his Anſwer to Mr. A. above-cited, he allows the Title of a Freeman only to Tenants in Capite; yet in his * Gloſſary he vouchſafes it to all other Military Tenants by Knight's Service promiſcuouſly; but as for all the reſt of their Followers, the ordinary Freemen or Freeholders of the Nation, he ſays, they had nothing to do there, but to augment the noiſe; for it is not probable that they who had the Force of the Nation would permit Men of ſmall Reputation to ſhare with them in Law-making.

* Pag. 17, 18.

* Tit. Liberi Homines.

This is indeed to beg the Queſtion, and to ſuppoſe that the Tenants in Capite had the whole force of the Nation in their hands, when the inferior Tenants were ten times their Number; and every one knows that when they appear (as they did here) in a Military and not a Civil State, it is not Quality nor Riches, but Strength and Number that giveth them a Right to Vote or Act. For what Obligation had theſe Inferior Tenants to their Lords the Tenants in Capite, to follow them to make War upon the King till He would grant the Great Charter, if their Lords and not themſelves, had the Intereſt and Benefit by it? but if they were like to be the better for it in reſpect of their Civil Liberties (as certainly they were) ſince many of the Privileges in the Great Charter do not relate to the Tenants in Capite alone, but to all other Freemen of the Kingdom; therefore, as far as theſe General Liberties granted to all the Freemen thereof, equally concern'd every private Perſon in that Aſſembly that was a Freeman and no Villain; he had certainly as much Right to give his Aſſent or Diſſent to this Charter, as the greateſt Lord or Tenant in Capite who was then in that Field or Meadow, and conſequently, was a Party to this Agreement.

But as for the Objections that are raiſ'd from certain Clauſes in this Charter, to prove, that none but the Greater Barons and Tenants in Capite had any Right to come to the preſent, or any future Great Councils or Parliaments, they ſhall be conſider'd, when we come in the Second Part to recite Dr. Brady's Arguments.

I ſhall therefore proceed to the long Reign of Henry the Third, where we find plainer Proofs for the Commons being preſent in Parliament than before; and I ſhall begin with the firſt Confirmation of this Great Charter by this King, in the ſecond Year of his Reign, when being but yet a Child, Guallo, the Pope's Legate, put his own Seal to it inſtead of the King's, which *Charter of Liberties, concludes with theſe words, Pro hac conceſſione, Archiepiſcopi, Epiſcopi, Abbates, Priores, Commites, Barones, Milites, Libere-Tenentes, & omnes de Regno noſtro dederunt Quintam decimam partem omnium Mobilium ſuorum. Now from theſe Freeholders, and all others of the Kingdom by their Repreſentatives, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, made Parties to the granting of this Aid, it plainly appears that the Commons were preſent in this Parliament, as well as the Lords and Tenants in Capite: But ſince Dr. Brady has raiſed divers Objections not only againſt the ſenſe in which we take the words laſt mention'd, but has doubted of the Antiquity of the Charter it ſelf, I ſhall defer the further Conſideration of this Point, till we come in order of Time to the ninth Year of this King's Reign, when this Charter was again confirm'd in Parliament.

* Vid. Chartam Mſs. in Bib. Lambeth & penes alios.

I proceed to the other Authorities in our Hiſtorians and Records, and produce one made uſe of by Dr, Brady himſelf, to ſupport his Opinion, which I ſuppoſe may be better urged to the contrary purpoſe; it is cired in his Gloſſary, p. 52. and is a † Writ directed to the Sheriff of Northampton-ſhire, ſetting forth, that for the payment 'of the King's Debts, and the preſervation of Poictou, all the Mag-'nates and Fideles, i. e. all the chief Men and faithful Subjects of

‘ the whole Kingdom had granted him a Gift of two Shillings out ‘ of every Plough-Land, to be collected by the Sheriffs and two of ‘ the moſt Legal Knights of the County, who were to be choſen by
‘ the Good-Will and Conſent of all Men of the County, in a full ‘ County-Court to perform this buſineſs.

This Great Council, or Parliament, is not mention'd by any of our Hiſtorians except Walter of Coventry, who, in his Manuſcript Hiſtory thus reckons up the Members of this Aſſembly, Archiepiſcopi, Epiſcopi, Abbates, & Proceres Angliæ, where, under the general word Proceres in this Hiſtorian, and Fideles in the Record, I ſuppoſe not only Tenants in Capite, but their inferior Tenants, or their Repreſentatives, are comprehended. Dr. Brady, by this word Fideles would only have the Tenants in Capite to be here underſtood, but I ſee no reaſon for that, ſince the word is put without the reſtriction of Noſtri; and ſo may ſignifie either the King's faithful Subjects, as Knights of Shires, or elſe any other inferior Tenants of ſufficient Eſtates, who might grant this Tax in this great Council as well as their Lords; but yet that the word Fideles may be taken in either of theſe ſenſes, the Dr. himſelf allows in his Gloſſary, Tit. Fideles. Note this Tax was a Carvage on all the Plough-Lands in England, of whatſoever Tenure, and ſo could not be impoſed by the Tenants in Capite alone, upon thoſe that did not hold their Lands by that Tenure. And further it appears by this Record, that this Tax was to be gathered by two of the moſt Legal Knights of the County, choſen by conſent of all the County-Court; and therefore all who owed Suit and Service to that Court, had a concern in the gathering of this Tax: And it is very well known, that not only Tenants in Capite, but thoſe who held by Socage-Tenure, were obliged to appear at the County-Court, and conſequently had alſo their Repreſentatives for the granting of this Tax, or elſe they could have had nothing to do in the chooſing of thoſe who were to collect it.

The next is a piece of Hiſtory patch'd up by the * Doctor, as making for his purpoſe, which, I think, will ſerve much better againſt it; it is an Account from Matt. Paris, ad Ann. 1224, being the eighth of this King's Reign, of the Parliament held at Northampton, on the Octaves of Holy Trinity, where the King, with the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, & multis aliis, being aſſembled to treat of the Affairs of the Kingdom, the Brother of Faukes de Brent ſeiz'd the King's Juſtices then ſitting at Dunſtable, and carried them away Priſoners to Bedford-Caſtle; whereupon the King, by the Advice of his Parliament, rais'd Forces and beſieg'd that Caſtle till it was taken; after which He had granted Him for his Labour and Expences, as well from the Prelates as Laymen, a Carucage throughout all England, of every Plough two Shillings of Silver; and then the King alſo granted to his Great Men a Scutage, viz. of every Knight's Fee, two Marks Sterling; from whence the Doctor collects, that theſe Alii multi above-mention'd, were the Abbots, Priors, and other Lay-Tenants in Capite; who, together with the other Orders or Eſtates, granted this Carucage: But, I think, we may well interpret theſe words to extend not only to the Tenants in Capite, but to other Inferior Tenants, by whatſoever free Service, who were there by their Repreſentatives. For how otherwiſe (as I ſaid before) could a general Carucage upon all the Plough-Lands throughout England be legally impoſed? ſince the great Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite could never repreſent the Tenants of ſuch Abbots and Priors, who held their Lands in Frank-Almoigne, and not in Capite, and ſo were not ſummon'd to this Parliament; as alſo all Tenants in Antient Demeſne, and by Socage and Burgage-Tenures; and laſtly, Tenants by Petty Sejeantry, and thoſe who held Lands of the King by Fee-Farm, paying a certain Rent: All which, together with their Under-Tenants, could never be Taxed or Rated by thoſe who were none of their chief Lords; ſince upon theſe Gentlemen's Principles, whom we oppoſe, the only reaſon why the Tenants in Capite could grant Taxes for their Under-Tenants, was, that holding their Lands of them in Fee, they did in ſome manner repreſent them, and were bound by their Acts: they could never repreſent or diſpoſe of the Eſtates of thoſe that had no ſuch Relation; and therefore by theſe multi Alii muſt be meant other than meer Tenants in Capite. But ſeeing a late Learned Writer, (who had done better if he had not given himſelf up too much to Dr. Brady's Notions) thinks the Hiſtorian deſtroys the words All others, by what follows after, the King's meeting all the Eſtates above-mention'd, Rex enim voluit uti Conſilio Magnatum ſuorum, i. e. for the King would make uſe of the Advice of his Great Men; by which Expreſſion this Author ſuppoſes none but Prelates, Great Lords, and Tenants in Capite can be underſtood: Had he been a little better verſed in our Records, he would have found that under Magnates, the Knights of Shires, called Grantz de Countees in French, are often comprehended, as well as the Earls and Barons, as ſhall be made out in another place; but as for the Scutage here granted by the King to the Great Men, out of every Knight's Fee held of them, it had nothing to do with this Tax, neither did it extend to all the Sub-Tenants by Military Service, but only to ſuch of them, who, having either through the deſire to ſave Charges, or out of their Lord's Favour had been ſpared from performing their Services at the Siege of Bedford-Caſtle, the King, by his Prerogative, granted their Lords Writs or Warrants to receive Scutage-Service from all ſuch Tenants proportionable to the Time their Lords had been in the King's Service, ſometimes one Mark, ſometimes two or three, as * Dr. Brady, in his Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, acknowledges.

* Pag. 116, 117.

I come now to the next Parliament held preſently after Chriſtmas the following Year, viz. 1225, where our † Hiſtorian tells us, the King being preſent with the Clergy, People, and Great Men of the Realm, Hubert de Burgh, in the King's Name, demanded a Subſidy of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and all Others there preſent, to which the whole Aſſembly of the Prelates, Earls, Barons, Abbots, and Priors, after ſome deliberation, anſwered, that they would willingly comply with the King's Deſires, provided He would grant them their long requeſted Liberties; the King hereunto conſented, and immediately order'd the Charters to be drawn up and ſeal'd with his Great Seal, and ſent into every County of England; which being perform'd, the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, Knights, Freeholders, and all Perſons of the Kingdom

dom granted the King a Fifteenth of all their moveable Goods, as appears by the Confirmation of this Charter in the ſecond Year of this King; from whence it may be collected, that the Clerus and Populus, that granted this Tax, were different Perſons from the Great Men that follow in the ſaid Recital; and that under the word Populus here mention'd, are comprehended the Milites, Libere-Tenentes, & Omnes de Regno, in the concluſion of this Charter, and who (with the reſt of the aforemention'd Orders) granted the King this Aid.

But Dr. Brady, to evade the force of this Authority, hath rais'd divers ſpecious Objections againſt the validity of this Charter, as alſo againſt that granted in the ſecond Year of this King, as if there were not now any true authentick Copies of them, ſince the Originals are not extant; and therefore in his Anſwer to Mr. A. maintains with great Confidence, that the Great Charter commonly attributed to Henry the Third, and ſtil'd his Charter in our Statute-Books, was properly the Charter of Edward the Firſt, or perhaps rather his Explication or Enlargement of that Charter of King John, and Henry the Third, for we find neither the Great Charter of that or King John's Form in any of the Rolls, until the 25th of Edward the Firſt; and He had a greater Summ of Money for the Confirmation of this Charter than Henry the Third had, as 'tis recorded in the Summons to a Parliament for that purpoſe: The Writ it ſelf you may find at length, of which I need not repeat any more than the Title, De veniendo pro confirmatione Magnæ Chartæ, i. e. a Summons for coming to Parliament for the confirmation of Magna Charta. I ſhall alſo add the reſt of what the Doctor ſays concerning this Subject, which will ſhew, that he wrote in haſte, and did not conſider, that the validity of theſe Charters could be made out againſt him: his words are theſe; † In this Charter, (viz. that of Edward the Firſt) then confirm'd, there is no proviſion made for any Summons to Great Councils or Parliaments, and the reaſon may well be, becauſe the Conſtitution of Great Councils or Parliaments was lately chang'd from what it was in King John's Time, until the 49th of Henry the Third; nor perhaps was it ſo fix'd, and peremptorily reſolv'd on at this time, what it ſhould exactly be for the future, as to have it made an Article of the Charter; and to this conjecture, the frequent variations of Summons to Parliament in thoſe Times, do give a probable confirmation.

* B. A. J. pag. 211.

The Doctor is here very right in the Obſervation he hath made upon this Charter, that the Clauſe concerning the ſummoning of the greater and leſs Tenants in Capite to the Councils of the Kingdom, is left out in this Charter of the Confirmation of Edward the Firſt; but he is very much miſtaken in ſuppoſing this to be the firſt time that it was ſo omitted; for had he been pleas'd to have conſulted any of the Manuſcript Copies of it, either of the ſecond or ninth of Henry the Third, he would there have found this very Clauſe to have been omitted in both of them; ſo that if the Doctor's Inference which he draws from this Omiſſion be true, it makes directly againſt his Hypotheſis; ſince according to his own Aſſertion, if the Conſtitutions of Great Councils or Parliaments was now chang'd from what it was in King John's Time, this Change muſt have conſiſted (as the Doctor acknowledges) in the omiſſion of ſummoning the leſs Tenants in Capite to the Common Councils of the Kingdom, and conſequently of bringing in the Knights of Shires in their rooms, which muſt have been at leaſt as antient as the ſecond of Henry the Third, when we find the Clauſe above-mention'd to be omitted in his Charter.

But I ſhall ſay more concerning the omiſſion of this Clauſe in another place, when I come to conſider the Doctor's Arguments; in the mean while I ſhall only take notice, that his Concluſion is very precarious, to wit, 'that the very conſtitution of Parliaments was not 'ſo fixed and peremptorily reſolved on at this time (viz. the 25th 'of Edward the Firſt) what it ſhould be for the future, as to have 'it made an Article of the Charter. But to obviate this, it appears, that from the twenty third of this King's Reign, which we have ſtill left upon the cloſe Rolls, the Writs of Summons to moſt Parliaments are directed both to the Lords and Commons, to the end of the Reign of King Edward the Fourth: And tho' the Doctor, in other places, endeavours to ſhew ſome variation in the Writs of Summoning Knights of Shires, as that at ſometimes two, and at other times three or four, had been ſummon'd for each County; and that the Citizens and Burgeſſes were ſometimes omitted to be ſummon'd to Parliament at all in this King's Reign; I ſhall defer the further conſideration of this till I come to treat upon that Subject, when I ſhall plainly ſhew the Doctor's Miſtake in this Matter; and that it was not to Parliaments, properly ſo call'd, but only to Great Councils upon extraordinary Occaſions, that more than two Knights were ſummon'd for each Shire; and if the Citizens and Burgeſſes were omitted to be call'd to them, it was becauſe the King had then no need of their Advice.

But I ſhall now return to the Matter from whence the Doctor hath forced me to digreſs; and that is to Anſwer thoſe Cavils, rather than real Objections, which he hath made againſt the validity of the Charters of the ſecond and ninth of Henry the Third: And as to them it may be thus anſwer'd.

Firſt, For the Charter granted in the ſecond of this King, tho' the Original of it hath been long ſince loſt in England, yet there are ſtill extant divers antient Manuſcript Copies of it, as old as the time of that King, ſome of which I my ſelf have ſeen; and there either is, or was lately extant at Dublin, an antient Copy of this Magna Charta of the ſecond of Henry the Third, enter'd in the Red Book of the Exchequer there, granted to all the Engliſh Subjects of Ireland, being the ſame, mutatis mutandis, with that granted to England, which cannot be ſuppos'd to have been done, unleſs his Engliſh Subjects ſhould in the firſt place have had the like confirm'd to them. And as to the Authentickneſs of thoſe Copies that are extant of the ninth Year of this King, there are ſeveral of them in the Cuſtody of Lawyers and Antiquaries; and Mr. Petyt has one of them, in an antient Copy of the old Statutes written in the time of Edward the Firſt: But to put it more out of doubt, I have ſeen in the Cuſtody of Sir Nathaniel Powel, Bencher of the Inner-Temple, a fair Original of this Magna Charta, dated the ninth of Henry the Third, under the Seal of that King (which once belonged to Battle-Abby.) And there are alſo two printed Copies of it in the Annals of Burton and Waverly, in each of which the firſt of the Witneſſes is not Archbiſhop Boniface, as it is falſly printed in our ordinary Statute-Books, but S. which ſtands for Stephen Langton, who was then Archbiſhop: And if any one will take the pains to examine and compare theſe two Charters of the ſecond and ninth of Henry the Third, with the Charter confirm'd by Edward the Firſt, he will find them all one and the ſame in almoſt every word; and therefore this laſt was no explication or enlargement of the former Charters, as this Author fancies, I ſuppoſe, without ever troubling himſelf to compare the one with the other.

B. A. P. p. 11. Having aſſerted the Truth and Antiquity of theſe Charters, I ſhall now go on to anſwer the Doctor's Arguments, whereby he would prove, that none but the Biſhops and Lords granted King Henry a Fifteenth for the Confirmation of Magna Charta; and this he draws from the above-mention'd Relation of the manner of granting it, ſet down by Matt. Paris; from whom the Doctor obſerves, that none but the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Abbots, and Priors, return'd the King this Anſwer, that they would comply with his Demands, if He would grant them their long requeſted Liberties; and that the King conſented to theſe their Deſires: And from this Account of this Parliament or Great Council, the Doctor concludes, that the Men that conſulted about the King's Demands, that gave the King this Anſwer, and that alſo granted a Fifteenth of the Moveables, as well of the Eccleſiaſticks as Laicks of the whole Kingdom, were only the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Abbots, and Priors; and therefore they were the only Conſtituent Parts of this Parliament, as they were alſo of the Parliament held at Merton, in the 20th Year of this King's Reign; the circumſtances of which the Doctor has here given us from Matth. Paris.

I ſhall ſay nothing to this laſt Authority, till I come to it in order of Time, but will here only anſwer this Argument, or rather Conſequence the Doctor draws from the words of this Author: I would ask his Friends (ſince he is not, and ſo cannot anſwer for himſelf) if this be an exact Account in Matt. Paris of all the conſtituent Members of this Parliament, who gave the King this Anſwer, and conſequently the Aid that follow'd it, how this could be a Common Council of the Kingdom, according to King John's Charter; for ſince the leaſt of the Lay-Orders there mention'd are Barons, the leſs Tenants in Capite, who were then no Barons, (by the Doctor's own Confeſſion) could be no Parties to this Anſwer, nor conſequently to the Grant of this Aid; ſo that it ſeems the Great

B. A. J p. 171. Charter of King John was no Pattern for all future Parliaments, as the Doctor has maintain'd in another place. But perhaps it may be ſaid, that the leſs Tenants in Capite were preſent in this Parliament, but did not give any Anſwer to the King's Demands, becauſe they left that to the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, &c. to do it for them; yet that they were there, and gave their Conſents to the granting this Aid, appears by the very words at the latter-end of this Charter, where it is ſaid, that the Milites and Libere-Tenentes, that is, the leſs Tenants in Capite join'd in the granting the King this Fifteenth of their moveable Goods.

Well, ſuppoſe for the preſent we grant this to be ſo, what will then become of the Doctor's Aſſertion from Matt. Paris, that none but the Parties there mention'd gave this Tax? ſo that the leſs Tenants in Capite being quite omitted by this Author, there is no depending upon his Authority, that there were no other Lay-Perſons there, than the Earls and Barons, and the reſt there mention'd, ſince the very Charter it ſelf ſhews there were many Others, even beſides thoſe leſs Tenants in Capite who gave this Aid; for ſuppoſing as much as can be deſir'd, that by Milites are to be underſtood thoſe Military-Tenants, yet the Liberi-Tenentes, and Omnes de Regno muſt be another ſort of Men, who were alſo Parties to this Grant, or elſe the conſtituent Members of this Council would be twice or thrice repeated.

But becauſe the Doctor will not allow of this natural ſenſe of theſe words, and does his utmoſt endeavour to wreſt them to quite another meaning, and make the leſs Tenants in Capite no Parties to this Grant, I ſhall here give you his Arguments in his own words, 'If (ſays he) theſe words of this Charter are literally to be underſtood, that Omnes de Regno, that is, All the Men of the Kingdom, granted this Aid, then it will follow, that as well thoſe that had Eſtates in Land, as thoſe that had not, all Copyholders, all Tradeſmen, all Bondmen and Villains (of which there were great ſtore in thoſe Days) and all Servants were there preſent as Members of Parliament; and then I would willingly know where all theſe People ſhould meet, how their Councils ſhould be managed, and how it is poſſible in ſuch Meetings (if any ſuch there can be) to prevent the greateſt Confuſion imaginable? The meaning then of theſe words muſt be, that the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, Knights, Free-Tenants, and all of the Kingdom, or all the King's Subjects dederunt, that is, paid a Fifteenth part of their Moveables to the King, for his granting theſe Charters, not that they themſelves gave or granted this Subſidy; and 'tis reaſonable to conclude, that all the King's Subjects paid the fifteenth Part, becauſe one way or other, little or much they enjoy'd the benefit of them. I take this to be the genuine ſenſe of theſe words, but Matt. Paris makes it very apparent, who were the conſtituent Parts of this Parliament; for if you pleaſe there to obſerve, the Men to whom the Chief Juſtice propoſ'd this Fifteenth, and thoſe who conſulted about the King's Demands, and thoſe that return'd an Anſwer to them; and alſo granted the fifteenth Part of the Moveables, as well of the Eccleſiaſticks as Laicks of the whole Kingdom, were only the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Abbots, Priors; and therefore they were only the conſtituent Parts of this Parliament, as they were alſo of the Parliament or Great Council held at Merton, in the 20th Year of the King's Reign, whither, ſays Matt. Paris, Conſummato cum gaudio Nuptiali convivio, Rex recedens à Londiniis venit Mertonam ut ibi convocati Magnates de Regni Negotiis contractarent.

B. A. P. p. 152, 126.

Having given you the Doctor's forced Interpretation of this Clauſe of theſe Charters, and the Authority he hath brought to confirm it, I ſhall now make a Reply with ſome other Obſervations upon it; and to begin with his Objection againſt theſe words, Liberi Tenentes & Omnes de Regno dederunt; by which he will needs have it underſtood, that ſince it was impoſſible for all the Freeholders and Others of the Kingdom to be perſonally preſent at this Parliament, therefore they had no hand in the granting of this Subſidy upon their Goods, as if they could by no means grant any thing by their Repreſentatives: But the * Doctor in another place is more eaſy, when he grants, that the Commons were ſummoned to another Parliament (as appears by a Record of the 35th of Edward the Firſt) when the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and Communities (i. e. the Commons) of Counties, gave the King a 'Thirteenth Part of their Goods, as if (ſays he) they were all 'Members and ſat in this Parliament; and ſo it is ſaid of the 'Cities and Boroughs, that the Citizens, Burgeſſes, or the Com'munities of Cities and Burghs, gave a Twentieth Part of their 'Moveables, as if they had been all there; but theſe words ſignify 'no more, than that the Knights and Freemen gave by their Re'preſentatives, as is moſt clear from the Writs of Expences for the 'Knights of Lincolnſhire, which he there gives us at large. Now, I would be glad if any one would inform me, what is here meant by the Communitates Comitatuum & Communitates Civitatum, &c. which the Doctor tranſlates Communities, but the Commons of thoſe Places? for the Doctor does not love to make uſe of that word if he can avoid it. Secondly, I would fain know the reaſon why theſe Freemen and Communities (as he calls them) could give by their Repreſentatives in the Time of Edward the Firſt the Tax abovemention'd; and yet the Freeholders, and all Others of the Realm, cannot be underſtood to do the like by their Repreſentatives in the Reign of Henry the Third; but if this be given for a Reaſon againſt it, becauſe the Commons were not then repreſented in Parliament any other ways than by their Lords the Tenants in Capite. This is to beg the Queſtion, quite contrary to the expreſs words in Magna Charta, which ſay, That the Freeholders, and all Others of the Kingdom granted a Fifteenth, as well as the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons.

* Gloſſ. p. 33, 34.

I ſhall now further ſhew, the Doctor's Error in the Interpretation of theſe words, whereby he would have it underſtood, that none but Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, and Barons granted this Subſidy; for in the firſt place he hath here omitted his beloved Tenants in Capite, that were then no Barons, out of his Catalogue of Givers, who, it ſeems, as well as the reſt of the ordinary ſort of People, muſt only pay their ſhare, but granted nothing; yet ſince there is but only one Verb, viz. Dederunt, which governs the whole Clauſe or Sentence, I would fain know, why in reſpect of the Archbiſhops, and all the reſt of the Parties, the Doctor there mentions as the Granters of this Aid, this Verb muſt be conſtrued, They granted; but as to the Liberi-Tenentes & Omnes de Regno, it muſt be underſtood, they paid it? And why may not one, if he would be as perverſe as the Doctor, conſtrue it, They paid in reſpect of them all, that is, the King demanded a Fifteenth by his Prerogative, and they paid it, without any Power to Grant or Refuſe? but indeed there is no need at all to wreſt the word Dederunt from its natural ſenſe, and make it, They paid, more in reſpect of one than the other.

And therefore I ſhall give you ſome Authorities from divers Antient Writers, that this word Dederunt could only ſignify, They gave, in reſpect to all the Parties there mention'd; and for this ſee the Annals of Waverly, in the ſecond Volume of Dr. Gale's Collections printed at Oxon, where, under this Year, An. Dom. 1225, after having given us a ſhort Account of the granting theſe Charters in the Ninth of Henry the Third, they recite the Concluſion of the Great Charter in the ſame words, as they are in the Charter it ſelf; only before Dederunt there is alſo added the word Conceſſerunt, which ſhews, that the Author of this part of thoſe Annals, who might very well write about the ſame time, or preſently after the Charter was granted, by the Addition of the Verb Conceſſerunt, intended to prevent any ſuch Miſtake in the Interpretation of the following word Dederunt. And that it was the Opinion of all other Hiſtorians of this Reign, is further confirm'd by the Manuſcript Chronicle of * Walter of Coventry, who lived and wrote in that very time, after he has given an Account of the Members of this Council, under the general Title of Proceres Angliæ; and that the King had then a fuller Treaty with the Clergy and People, to whom He then confirm'd the above-mention'd Charter of Liberties, concludes thus, Ibidem conceſſa eſt Domino Regi à Commitibus & Baronibus, & Clero & Populo, Quinta Decima omnium Bonorum. Now, who can be meant by the Populus, mention'd in both theſe Authors diſtinctly from the Earls and Barons, as preſent at this Parliament, but the Commons, as now underſtood? who alſo (as this laſt Author expreſly tells us) granted this Fifteenth, tho' Matt. Paris has omitted that remarkable circumſtance; and Henry de Knighton, who lived ſomewhat more than one hundred Years after this Charter was granted, in his Hiſtory, hath this Paſſage, under this Year, Poſt hæc Rex Henricus conceſſit Magnatibus Terræ duas Chartas, unam de Foreſta, & aliam de Libertatibus propter quam cauſam Communes Regni conceſſerunt quintam decimam Partem mobilium. The laſt words being very remarkable I ſhall tranſlate; for which cauſe the Commons of the Kingdom granted a Fifteenth of their Moveables: From whence it appears plainly, that at the time when this Author wrote, it was generally believed, that the Commons, under the Title of Liberi Tenentes & Omnes de Regno in this Charter, granted the Fifteenth of all their Goods.

* In Bib Cotton.

And further, in Anſwer to the Doctor's Citation concerning the Magnates who met at the Parliament at Merton, it appears, that under the word Magnates in Knighton the Knights of Shires muſt be included, or elſe King Henry granted thoſe Charters only to the Biſhops, Lords, and Tenants in Capite, which certainly no Man that hath read the Great Charter, and that of Foreſts, but once over, would take upon him to maintain; but the Doctor, in his * Gloſſary, in his † Anſwer to Mr. A's. Janus, &c. as alſo in other places, will needs have the Omnes de Regno (who gave this Subſidy of a Fifteenth of their Perſonal Eſtates) to be Tenants in Capite; and that theſe words ſignifie no more than the Omnes alii de Regno, who are mention'd in a * Writ on the Cloſe Roll of the Nineteenth of Henry the Third, directed to the Sheriff of Somerſetſhire, in theſe words, Sciatis quod Comites, & Barones, & Omnes alii, &c. de toto

* P. 217, 218.

† P. 64.

* M. 6. Dorſ.

Regno noſtro conceſſerunt, nobis efficax Auxilium, which, ſays he, is further explain'd by another Writ on the ſame Roll, directed to the Sheriff of Suſſex, beginning thus, Sciatis quod Archiepiſcopi, Epiſcopi, Abbates, Priores, Comites, Barones, & Omnes alii de Regno noſtro Angliæ quide nobis tenent in Capite nobis conceſſerunt, &c. here (ſays the Doctor) the Omnes alii de Regno, were the Omnes qui de nobis tenent in Capite, which were then all the Regnum or Communitas Regni, that is, the whole Kingdom, or Body of it.

But I deſire no better an Argument for the Confutation of this Opinion, than his own Authority, which he hath here cited; for tho' in the firſt of theſe Writs, the Earls, Barons, and All others of the Kingdom, are ſaid to have granted this Aid; yet in the middle of this Record it is reſtrain'd only to the Earls, Barons, and All others who held of the King in Capite; and the next Writ plainly ſhews, who were the ſole Parties to theſe Grants, viz. Omnes Alii qui de nobis tenent in Capite; and I do not deny but that the Doctor hath produced ſeveral Precedents, to prove that the Tenants in Capite, in thoſe Times, gave the King Subſidies or Aids, not only for themſelves but their Tenants, who held of them by Knight's Service; but what doth this ſignify to this Clauſe in theſe Charters, where the words are not, Omnes qui de nobis Tenent in Capite, but Omnes de Regno, in General?

For, notwithſtanding all the Doctor's Skill, he could never be able to prove, that his Barons and Tenants in Capite were the ſole Repreſentatives of the whole Kingdom, as he there ſuppoſes; for who but himſelf could ever imagine, that the Tenants in Capite, who were not half the Kingdom, ſhould have a Power to Tax and Aſſeſs not only themſelves and their own Tenants, but thoſe that held by Socage-Tenure, as the Tenants of the King's Antient Demeſns, and Socage-Tenants of other Lords; as alſo thoſe that held of Biſhops and other Great Men; as likewiſe the Tenants of all ſuch Abbies, Nunneries, and Religious Houſes, whoſe Priors and Abbeſſes never appear'd in Parliament; beſides, the City of London, and all other Cities and Boroughs, ſome whereof held immediately of the King, and Others of Lords and Biſhops, not by Military, but Socage and Borough-Tenure, and conſequently could never be repreſented by the Tenants in Capite, unleſs the Doctor or his Friends could prove, that all Men in thoſe Days held their Perſonal Eſtates, as well as Lands by Military Tenure; which is ſuch an Abſurdity, that, I think, none that have any knowledge of the Laws of England, can ever be guilty of: But unleſs the Doctor can prove this, neither he nor his Friends will ever convince any indifferent Reader, that the Barons and Tenants in Capite could, in thoſe days, give a Fifteenth Part of the Moveable Goods of all the Subjects of the Kingdom, who never held of them at all. To conclude, if the greater and leſs Tenants in Capite, as the Repreſentatives of the whole Kingdom, could impoſe what Taxes they pleas'd upon thoſe that were none of their Tenants, they certainly very little underſtood their own Intereſt, and had been very improvident in granting the King ſo much out of every Knight's Fee, held either by themſelves or their Tenants, whereby all the reſt of the People eſcaped Scot-free; whereas if they had either given a general Carucage, or a Tax upon all Moveables, they and their Tenants would have been much more eas'd, and the Burthen have been equally laid upon the whole Kingdom.

I have dwelt the longer upon this Point, but hope I ſhall not be thought tedious, ſince if this be once plainly prov'd, that the Commons of England ſent their Repreſentatives to Parliament, in the Second and Ninth of Henry the Third (when the Great Charter was twice confirm'd in a few Years) it is highly probable they continued throughout the reſt of this Reign.

I ſhall therefore now go to the Sixteenth of this King, being A.D. 1232, when He held a * Colloquium or Parliament, with the Biſhops, Prelates, and Proceres, i. e. Chief Men of the Kingdom; now who theſe Proceres were, the ſame Chronicle tells us, preſently after, ſhewing, that then the King received from the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and Clerks, having Lands, which did not belong to their Churches; as alſo from the Earls, Barons, Knights, Freemen, & Villani, i. e. the Inhabitants of Towns, a fortieth Part of their Moveables. This is alſo confirm'd by a † Writ, which was iſſued out for the raiſing it, where it is expreſly recited, that all the Parties mention'd in this Hiſtorian, granted the King this Aid of a Fortieth Part of their Moveable Goods; tho' as to the Liberi Homines here mention'd, I know the Doctor would have them only mean all thoſe that held of the King in Capite; yet that they ſignify all other ſorts of Freeholders, I have already proved; and the Doctor himſelf, in his Gloſſary, grants, that they do not only ſignifie Tenants in Capite, but all other Military Tenants whatſoever; and by Villani * he allows to be meant, either Villains, or the Inhabitants of Towns or Villages, or elſe Repreſentatives for ſuch Towns as held of the King in Capite, ſuch as might be the Burgeſſes of St. Alban's. As for the firſt of theſe Interpretations it can by no means be true, ſince the Villains or Bondmen having no Property could pay no Taxes; but if it be taken for the Inhabitants of ſmaller Towns, they were repreſented by ſome of the Orders of Men already mention'd: And if they were the Inhabitants of Boroughs, whether they were thoſe that held in Capite or not, they gave this Fortieth Part by their Repreſentatives; and therefore the Cities and Boroughs muſt have appear'd in Great Councils or Parliaments many Years before the Forty ninth of this King; and that not only ſuch of them as held in Capite, but other Boroughs, that held of Biſhops or Great Lords, I ſhall make out further in due Time: However, this Tax being a general one upon all Moveable Goods, could never reach the whole Kingdom, if only the Tenants in Capite had been the Granters of it, for the Reaſons already given; and therefore by the Milites, Liberi Homines, and Villani, mention'd in theſe Records and Hiſtories, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes are, and muſt be underſtood.

I ſhall now proceed to the Statute of Merton, cited by the Doctor to make out his Notion, that none but the Magnates, i. e. Great Men and Tenants in Capite were preſent at it; the Preamble of this Statute runs thus; * Proviſum eſt in Curiâ Domini Regis Henrici, &c. coram Will. Cant. Archiepiſcopo, & Epiſcopis Suffraganiis ſuis, & coram ram majore parte Comitum & Baronum Angliæ ibidem exiſtentium, &c. ita proviſum fuit & conceſſum tam à prædictis Archiepiſcopis, Comitibus, Baronibus, quam ab ipſo Rege & Aliis. Now by theſe Alii put after Rex & Barones, I ſuppoſe the Commons in the Senſe they are now us'd are to be underſtood; but I am ſenſible that it will be alledg'd by thoſe of Doctor B's Opinion, that by theſe Alii or Others, are to be underſtood the leſs Tenants in Capite only: To which it may be reply'd, That this is only gratis Dictum, and without any Proof; for if the Word, Barones, in the Doctor's Senſe comprehends all the Tenants in Capite in general, I would be glad to know, Why it ſhould not do ſo here too? And therefore it lies upon the Gentlemen of the contrary Opinion to prove, that theſe Alii here mention'd, were no Other than the leſs Tenants in Capite; whereas I may as well affirm the contrary, eſpecially ſince I have already proved from the laſt Authorities, that the Commons were preſent in the Parliaments of the Second, Ninth, and Sixteenth of Henry the Third; and therefore I cannot believe they were excluded that Great Aſſembly at Merton.

In another * Writ of the next Year (quoted alſo by the Doctor) it is there recited, 'that the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, 'Earls, and Barons of the whole Kingdom, having on the Octaves 'of St. Hillary treated with the King, concerning the ſtate of the 'Kingdom the ſame Prelates abovemention'd, as alſo the Clercs or 'Clergymen) having Lands that did not belong to their Churches; 'and likewiſe the Earls, Barons, Knights, and Freemen, for themſelves and their Villains, granted the King, as an Aid, a Thirtieth 'Part of all their Moveables.

From which Record we may obſerve, that tho' none but the Parties firſt mention'd are here ſaid to have treated with, or adviſed the King; yet Others beſides them, viz. the Clercs having Lands, and Freemen of the Kingdom, are alſo made Parties to this Grant; and in this Record the word Villani ſignifies the Ruſtics or ordinary Husbandmen, or Copyholders at Will under thoſe Freemen, but they were not Bondmen or Slaves (as the Doctor will have them to be); for all the Goods they had being their Lords, they could not be capable of ſuch a Tax. The Doctor would alſo have theſe Liberi Homines here mention'd, to mean only the Tenants in Capite, but that is a great Miſtake; for the word Milites here placed after Barones, muſt, according to the Doctor's own ſenſe of that word, ſignify the leſs Tenants in Capite; and if by Liberi Homines, or Freemen, the ſame ſort of People are alſo to be underſtood, it would make this Record guilty of a fooliſh and impertinent Tautology, in repeating the ſame Order twice; and if none but Tenants in Capite granted this Tax, which was upon all the Moveable Goods of the Kingdom, then they muſt have taxed all thoſe whom they could no ways repreſent, which they had no Right to do.

My next Inſtance is from Matt. Paris, ad A. D. 1244, on the 28th of this King's Reign, when the Great Men of the Kingdom Aſſembled at London by the Royal Summons, viz. when the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, and Barons, that is, the whole Parliament, were met at Weſtminſter-Hall, upon the King's deſiring an Aid of them, they all left the Hall, the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and the reſt of the Eccleſiaſticks laſt mention'd, went aſide by themſelves to treat of it; and when they had agreed, they ſent to the Earls and Barons (who were likewiſe in another place by themſelves) to know if they would unanimouſly comply with them; but they anſwer'd the Biſhops, that Sine Communi Univerſitate, that is, without the conſent of the whole Body of the Kingdom they would do nothing. The Doctor, I know, tranſlates theſe words, Common Univerſity, becauſe the Reader ſhould not know what is meant by them; and when he does undertake to interpret it * he always makes it to conſiſt of the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, and Barons alone, or elſe of them and the leſs Tenants in Capite, taken together; yet that there muſt be more intended by it in this place, appears by this Anſwer of the Lords, that they would do nothing without the Common or General Body of the Kingdom. Now, if the Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſticks met in one Room, and the Earls and Barons, and Tenants in Capite in another, what could hinder theſe Eſtates from preſently agreeing and coming to a Concluſion, if they alone had made up this Common Univerſity (as the Dr. calls it)? but we find it otherwiſe; for tho' the Biſhops and the reſt of the Prelates ſent to the Lords to ſee if they would agree with what they had reſolved upon; yet the Anſwer of the Temporal Lords is, that Sine Communi Univerſitate nihil potuerunt, they could do nothing; now, I know not what ſhould be meant by theſe words, Sine Communi Univerſitate, but without the Repreſentatives of the Commons, as now underſtood; for that they were the leſs Tenants in Capite, * Dr. Brady will not allow, for they being meer Commoners, his Aſſertion would not have been true, that there were no Commoners in that moſt general Parliament of the 30th of this King: But to return to my Author.

* Ib. p. 127.

It there preſently follows, that by Common Aſſent, (that is, of the whole Body of this Parliament) there were elected four Biſhops for the Clergy, and for the Laity four Earls and two Barons, with two Abbots; yet this does not at all infer, that an Inferior Order of Men might not have join'd with them in their Choice, tho' they might not think fit to chuſe any of their own Order; as being not ſo powerful and conſiderable as the Great Earls and Barons.

I ſhall now further proceed to ſhew you, of what Members this Univerſitas Regni, or General Body of the whole Kingdom then conſiſted, which appears by that General Parliament, which Matt. Paris tells us, was held in the twelfth Year of this King, A.D. 1246. when there met at London All the Nobility of the whole Kingdom, that is to ſay, the Prelates, as well the Abbots and Priors, as Biſhops; and alſo the Earls and Barons, that they might treat effectually of the unſettled State of the Kingdom, according to the urgent neceſſity of it. In this very Parliament the King confer'd with the Biſhops by themſelves, the Earls and Barons by themſelves; as alſo with the Abbots and Priors concerning thoſe things about which He had already ſent his Ambaſſadors to the Council of Lyons, viz. the Grievances of the Roman Church: The reſult of theſe Conferences was, that yet for the reverence due to the Apoſtolick See, they ſhould again ſupplicate the Pope by Letters, to remove that inſupportable Yoke of Exactions here in England; whereupon the Biſhops wrote by themſelves, the Abbots and Priors by themſelves, and the Earls, Barons, & Alii Magnates, and the other Great Men wrote Letters to the Pope by themſelves, which are thus directed, To the moſt Holy Father, &c. Your Devoted Sons, Richard Earl of Cornwal, and the reſt of the Earls there named, with the other Barons, and the Chief and Great Men of England, and the Noble Inhabitants of the Sea-Ports, as alſo the whole Clergy and People, wiſh Health. From which Direction, drawn up in Parliament, on the behalf of all the Laiety and Inferior Clergy, it appears, that there were other Great Men called Magnates (moſt likely the Knights of Shires) and alſo the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, here called Nobiles Portuum maris Habitatores, who join'd in this Anſwer with the Earls and Barons abovemention'd. But * Dr. Brady will by no means admit of this Interpretation of theſe Phraſes, but will have them to be a meer troop of words drawn up in this Letter to no other purpoſe than to make an Impreſſion upon the Pope, and ſhew Him the great diſlike the Nation had of his Exactions and Encroachments, and to induce Him to a Compliance with their Deſires, the Multitude not being any ways Parties or privy to the writing of the Letter; for the Clamour of the People was a great Argument uſed in all theſe Letters to affect the Pope, how ungrateful his Impoſitions were to the Nation. And here the Doctor produces ſeveral Paſſages out of this Letter, as alſo out of the King's Letter to Him about the ſame Affair, that the Clamour of the Great Men and People againſt theſe Abuſes were ſo loud, that they were not any longer to be endur'd; ſo that it was from this general Clamour of the People, and not from their being Parties to it, that the beginning of this Letter from the Baronage of England, was ſtuffed with ſo many Words and Phraſes, being only done to awaken the Pope, and incite Him to redreſs their Grievances.

But with the Doctor's good Favour, I cannot believe that all this was a meer empty troop of words (as he calls it) only to frighten his Holineſs into a compliance with their deſires; for the Pope was better inform'd by his Tax-gatherers and Emiſſaries in England, concerning its Civil Conſtitution, than to be ſo impos'd upon; and therefore, albeit I do not affirm, that the Multitude or Rabble without Doors had any hand in this Letter; yet I cannot conceive, unleſs their Repreſentatives were Parties and privy to it, to what purpoſe the Magnates ac Nobiles Portuum Habitatores are here menton'd after the Earls and Barons; ſince had not this Clamour of the Great Men, Clergy, and People been made in Parliament, the Pope might have had good reaſon to deny the Matter of Fact, and return in Anſwer, that He did not believe there was any ſuch Clamour at all.

The ſame Author mentions another Parliament held in the thirty ſecond Year of this King, A. D. 1248, and to have met on the Octaves of the Purification of the Virgin at London; at which, beſides a multitude of Barons, Knights, and Nobles; as alſo of Abbots, Priors, and Clergy, there came nine Biſhops, and as many Earls; from whence I obſerve, that tho' by the Milites put after Barones, the leſs Tenants in Capite may be meant; yet by the Nobiles that follow them, I can underſtand no others than the Nobiles minores, the leſs Nobles, ſuch as Knights of Shires; for all the reſt of the Lay-Orders were already expreſſed.

* B. A. P. pag. 106, 107.

A few Years after this the Annals of Burton under A. D. 1252, mention a Parliament to be held at Weſtminſter, where the two Archbiſhops, the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and (Magnates) Great Men of the whole Realm of England were preſent; by theſe Magnates, put after the Barons, may we not underſtand, at leaſt, the Knights of Shires?

Under the Year 1253 Matt. Paris relates, that all the Nobility of England being met at London, by the King's Summons, He again confirm'd the two Charters, and then the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, with the conſent of the reſt of the Biſhops, ſolemnly Excommunicated all thoſe that ſhould violate them, the King himſelf being preſent, and conſenting to it; the circumſtances of which you may ſee in our Author; but that which is moſt remarkable is, that it appears by a Record of this Sentence of Excommunication ſtill extant on the * Rolls, that the Commons were preſent, and acted in this Parliament; for it is there recited, 'That the King, the Great 'Men, and the Communitas Populi, do publickly proteſt, in the 'preſence of the Archbiſhop, and of all the Biſhops, being at this 'Parliament, that if any thing be added or alter'd in the ſaid Sentence, when reduc'd into Writing, they never gave their Conſents 'to it, but abſolutely oppoſe and contradict it; and the concluſion 'is very remarkable too, that in Memory of this, and for a Teſtimony of the Truth, the King, as alſo the ſaid Earls, have at the 'Inſtance of the other Great Men and People there preſent, put to their 'Seals.

Now, by the Communitas Populi, mention'd in the Body of this Inſtrument, as alſo by the words & Populi, put after Magnates at the end of it, I can underſtand no Others, than the Repreſentatives of the Commons; for I do not find that the Tenants in Capite were ever ſtil'd the People in our Hiſtorians and Records: But ſince † Dr. B. in his Anſwer to Mr. P. will not allow, that by the Communitas Populi here, put after Magnates, is meant any Others than the Tenants in Capite, I ſhall give you the Sum of his Anſwer to it, for to ſet it down at length would be too tedious: Firſt, He cites * Matt. Paris, that at this Parliament, which was held fifteen Days after Eaſter, the whole Nobility of England was aſſembled; now, who theſe were he proves thus; the ſame Author ſays, that upon the King's Confirmation of Magna Charta the Church granted the Tenth of their Revenues for three Years; and then there was granted by the Knights (or Nobility) for that Year, a Scutage of three Marks upon every Knight's Fee, and then was pronounc'd the Excommunication in the manner already mention'd, againſt all that ſhould violate the Great Charters, which the * Doctor here ſuppoſes to be granted ſolely to the 'Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates of England, to the Earls, Barons, Knights, and Free-Tenants, 'by whom the Doctor only underſtands, Tenants by Military or 'Knight's Service, for they only were ſuch as paid this Scutage, which 'was a kind of Compoſition with the King for Magna Charta: And 'the Doctor obſerves from this Relation of Matt. Paris, that all the 'Temporal Nobility are called in the Grant of the Scutage, Milites, Military Knights. And Secondly, He further collects, that beſides the Barones Majores there came alſo to this Great Council or Parliament the other Tenants in Capite, according to the Direction of King John's Charter, who were included in the words Tota Nobilitas, and the other Tenants that held of them by Knight's Service, were bound by their Acts: From all which the * Doctor concludes, 'that by theſe words in this Record, Dominus Rex & prædicti Magnates Omnes, & Communitas Populi proteſtantur publicè, &c. no more are meant, but the King, and all the Great Men and Community of the People, that is, of the Community of the Laiety in general, who proteſted publickly, in the preſence of all the Biſhops; for ſince the Clergy and Laiety are often expreſs'd and diſtinguiſh'd by Clerus & Populus, therefore that Communitas Populi does not here ſignify the Community of the Commons, but only the Community or Body of the Laiety there preſent. But I ſhall now ſhew, that the Doctor is very much out in his Obſervations and Concluſions from this Relation in Matt. Paris, as alſo in his Interpretation of the words Nobilitas and Communitas Populi: Firſt, As to the tota Angliæ Nobilitas, the Doctor does not make it out, that there were none but the Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite comprehended under that Title, ſince the Meſne-Tenants by Knight's Service, as likewiſe all Men of Eſtates, tho' they held them by Petyt-Sergeanty of the King, or in Common Socage, were reckon'd among the Nobiles minores, as I could prove from divers Inſtances; and that every Knight was reckon'd among the Great Men, appears † by a Prohibition of Edward the Second on Record, where any of the Magnates Regni, viz. any Earl, Baron, Knight, or Other notable Perſon, are forbid to go beyond Sea without the King's Licenſe; and conſequently the Knights of Shires (whom I ſuppoſe to have been preſent at this Parliament) might be the Milites that gave this Scutage; for that none but Tenants in Capite were at firſt capable of being elected is another Miſtake of the Doctor's, which I ſhall confute in due time; but that the Inferior Tenants to the Tenants in Capite were there reckon'd among the Milites, the * Doctor himſelf allows a little after. as appears by this Paſſage which he tranſlates from Sir Henry Spelman's † Gloſſary; for the Name of Miles was not from the Military Girdle or Cincture by which Knights were created, but from the Military Fee which the Knight enjoy'd; from whence he was ſometimes called a Free Tenant (to which the Doctor immediately adds) ſuch as had Lands given them for, or ſuch as held Lands by Military Service, and did Homage to thoſe of whom they held their Lands; and in this ſenſe Matt. Paris calls all the Temporal Nobility, Milites, when in the Parliament 37 of Henry the Third, he ſays, à Militibus conceſſum eſt Scutagium, &c. This is the very Parliament the Doctor now treats of; and I ſhall leave it to the indifferent Reader, whether by the words foregoing he does not take in all the inferior Tenants by Military Service among the Milites, and conſequently into the Body of the Nobility: I grant he is of another Opinion in the place above-cited, but if he will contradict himſelf I cannot help it; yet I muſt not here omit taking notice of the diſingenuity of the Doctor (to call it no worſe)

* Ib. p. 75.

that in his reciting in Latin all the Parties to whom theſe Charters were granted, he leaves out the words Omnibus aliis de Regno coming after Militibus with an &c. nor takes any notice at all of them in his Tranſlation, whereby he would make his Readers believe, that none but the Perſons there above-mention'd had any Intereſt in theſe Charters; whereas in the former Grants, not only the Military Tenants, but all Others, gave the King a Fifteenth of their Moveables; tho' the Doctor will not here allow even the former to have granted, but only paid this Scutage; whereas in this Author it is, conceſſum eſt à Militibus Scutagium, the word conceſſum being to be underſtood, tho' not expreſſed.

And if the word Milites in Matt. Paris muſt be taken in the Doctor's ſenſe, it cannot extend to any more of the Laiety than he expreſly mentions to have come to this Parliament, viz. the Earls and Barons, and conſequently the other Tenants in Capite being no Barons, could not be reckon'd among them who were preſent there.

But to add ſomewhat more concerning the Doctor's ſenſe of the Communitas Populi, which he will not have to ſignify the leſs Tenants in Capite (as one would ſuppoſe he ſhould) but the Community of the Laiety in general; the reaſon is plain, for if the Repreſentatives of the Commons came into the place of the Tenants in Capite (as the Doctor himſelf owns elſewhere) then by the ſame Rule, the words Communitas Populi, and the Communitas Regni (which are all one) muſt ſignify the ſame Order of Men in the Parliaments of the 49th of Henry the Third, and in all other ſucceeding Parliaments, which he will by no means admit: But to avoid this he falls into another as great an Abſurdity; for tho' it is true that the word, Populus, when it is coupled with Clerus by the conjunction Et, ſignifies all the Laiety, yet it cannot, without a notorious Tautology, be taken in that ſenſe in the Record now before us; for theſe words coming after Omnes Magnates, would then be needleſs, ſince if they comprehend all the Great Men or Lay-Nobility (whom the Doctor affirms to have been then the only Conſtituent Members of this Parliament) the following words, viz. Et Communitas Populi (in the Doctor's ſenſe) would have been to no purpoſe at all, ſince the whole Community of the Laiety, as repreſented in this Parliament, was already expreſſed by the Omnes Magnates; and therefore it muſt certainly mean ſome other Body of Men diſtinct from the former; but whether the Tenants in Capite, or the Repreſentatives of the Commons, ſhall be conſider'd by and by.

But that the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, with the leſs Tenants in Capite did not then make the whole Communitas Regni, or Repreſentative Body of the Kingdom, will further appear from the next Parliament held in the 38th Year of this King, which was ſummon'd during his Abſence beyond Sea, by the Queen and Earl of Cornwal (then Regents of the Kingdom) to meet fifteen Days after Eaſter: At which tho' * Matt. Paris only mentions in general, that the Magnates Regni then aſſembled at Weſtminſter, yet that two Knights out of every Shire were alſo ſummon'd to it, appears by a † Writ upon the Clauſe Roll of this Year, directed to the Sheriffs of Bedford and Buckingham-Shires, whereby, among other things, he † Rot. Clauſe 38. H. 3. m. 7. & 12. printed at large in B. J. A. p. 21.

he is commanded, To cauſe to appear before the King's Council, four legal and diſcreet Knights of the ſaid Counties, whom thoſe Counties ſhould elect to this purpoſe, in the ſtead of all and ſingular Perſons of the ſame, viz. two out of the one County, and two out of the other, to provide, together with the Knights of other Counties (whom the King had cauſed to be ſummoned to Parliament the ſame day) what Aid they would grant Him in ſo great a neceſſity, &c. from whence it appears, that theſe Knights of Shires were ſent up to this Parliament to grant the King an Aid for themſelves and all others of thoſe Counties; and therefore theſe could not be the Repreſentatives of the leſs Tenants in Capite only. But ſince the Doctor [*] will by no means allow, that theſe Knights mention'd in this Record were ſummon'd to a Parliament, he therefore recites from Matt. Paris the whole Relation of the King's being then in Gaſcoigne, and his endeavours (in a former Parliament lately held) to get Money from the Barons on pretence of defending Himſelf againſt the King of Caſtile, who threatned to invade that Country; but all the Anſwer they had return'd thereupon was, That they would, if there were occaſion, come over to his Aſſiſtance with conſiderable Forces, three Weeks after Eaſter.

[*] Ib. p. 213.

The [†] Doctor here further takes notice, that there were ſome other Perſons then ſummon'd by the Writ above-mention'd; for upon that Promiſe of the Earls and Barons, the Sheriff was to ſummon all who held twenty Pounds per Annum of Land in Capite, to be ready to go towards Portſmouth three Weeks after Eaſter. Then he recites from the ſame Writ, another Clauſe for the Sheriffs to ſummon the four Knights above-mention'd: After which there is alſo a third Clauſe to command the Sheriffs to levy and pay in all the King's Debts into the Exchequer by a certain day. From all which the Doctor concludes, that this was not a Summons to a general Council or Parliament, for the King had tried that before without Succeſs; ſo that theſe Knights were neither ſummon'd ad Tractatum vel Colloquium (the uſual words for Parliamentary Councils in thoſe times) but only to appear before the King's Council to inform them what voluntary Aid each particular County would give the King in his great neceſſity, toward the defence of Gaſcoigny, againſt the intended Invaſion of the King of Caſtile; which buſineſs and neceſſity (as appears by the Writ it ſelf) the Sheriffs were diligently to ſet forth to theſe Knights, before they came up; from whence the Doctor concludes, that the Univerſity or general Body of the Kingdom in Great Councils or Parliaments, conſiſted of the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, as Matt. Paris ſets forth.

[†] Ibid.

Now to take off this Authority of his, I reply, that if there were no others preſent at the Parliament above-mention'd, then the Parties above-recited, the loweſt degree of which were the Barons, it muſt follow, that the leſs Tenants in Capite (being no Barons) were not ſummon'd to it; and ſo this was no Council or Parliament at all, according to King John's Charter, but only an Aſſembly of the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons; and conſequently this Citation from Matt. Paris will not ſerve the Doctor's deſign; but if the Doctor's Friends will ſay, that the leſs Tenants in Capite might be there, notwithſtanding they are not expreſly mention'd, and may be comprehended under the general Term of Magnates Regni, I may with as good Reaſon and Authority affirm, that the Knights of Shires alſo were comprehended under that Title; and from hence may alſo infer, that if ſo conſiderable a Body of Men as the leſs Tenants in Capite were then omitted to be mention'd by this Author, ſo might alſo the Repreſentatives of the Commons.

But to come more cloſely to this matter, I ſhall now prove, that theſe Knights were really ſummon'd to a Council or Parliament, for the Doctor ſlyly paſſes it by without ſaying a Word, yet * Matt. Paris expreſly mentions another Parliament to have met at London preſently after Eaſter, where the Magnates Angliæ refuſed to grant the King any Aid, as He then deſired; and the reaſon was, becauſe they were inform'd that the King of Caſtile's Deſign to invade Gaſcoigny was off, a Peace being privately made between the King and Him; now to apply the above-cited Record to this Council, or Parliament, it plainly appears by the Day on which theſe Knights were to appear before the King's Council at Weſtminſter, viz. the Quindene of Eaſter, that this was the very time when this Parliament was to meet. But by the way you are to take notice, that the King's Council here mention'd, before whom theſe Knights of Shires were to give in their Anſwer, what Aid they would grant the King for their reſpective Counties, were not the King's ordinary Privy Council, but his Council in Parliament, of whom I ſhall ſay more in another place: And that before this Council, not only the Knights of Shires, but alſo the Prelates, Earls and Barons (when ſummon'd to Parliament) were ſometimes commanded to appear, and anſwer what Aid they would give the King in Parliament, appears from the Proceedings concerning the making Prince † Edward a Knight; and this Record the Doctor has printed in his Appendix to his Introduction, p. 32. by which it is evident that the Biſhops, Earls, Barons and Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes, all appear'd before them, and there gave in their Anſwers, what Aid they would allow Him towards the Knighting his Eldeſt Son, as alſo for other great Expences He was at, for ſuppreſſing the Rebellion of Robert Bruce: And then the ſaid Parties granted the King a Twentieth part of their Moveables, and the Citizens and Burgeſſes a Twentieth. It is alſo very remarkable, that there is not any thing mention'd in this Record, whereby it may be gather'd, that this Summons was to a Parliament, and yet it appears by the * Clauſe-Rolls of 34 Edward I. that a Parliament was then ſummon'd; ſo that if we compare the Writs and Proceedings in both theſe Caſes together, they will appear almoſt the ſame, the Knights of Shires in the Thirty eighth of Henry the Third, were ſummon'd to appear before the King's Council in Parliament, to make their Anſwer what Aid they would give the King for the Defence of Gaſcoigny, and in the Thirty fourth of Edward the Firſt, the Knights were alſo ſummon'd to appear before the like Council, to treat about an Aid for the Ends above-mention'd. 'Tis true, in this laſt Writ theſe Words Ordain and Treat are expreſſed, tho' omitted in that of the Thirty eighth of Henry the Third, I ſuppoſe, by the Negligence of him that drew it up; but it muſt be underſtood, for how otherwiſe could they give in their Anſwers without treating, and tax themſelves and the Coun-

Counties they repreſented, without ordaining the ſeveral Proportions then given: And tho' there are indeed other Clauſes in this Writ, beſides the ſummoning of theſe Knights, yet this might proceed from the haſt the King's Clerks were then in, to ſave them the Trouble of writing and ſealing ſo many different Writs.

Having now, I hope, render'd it more than probable, that the Knights of Shires mention'd in this Writ were ſummon'd to a Parliament properly ſo call'd, it will likewiſe here further ſhew the Doctor's Miſtake in ſo poſitively aſſerting, that no Knights of Shires were ſummon'd thither before the Forty ninth of Henry the Third.

And as I have fully ſetled the true Meaning of the Term, Univerſitas Regni, to be the whole Body of the Kingdom, as repreſented by the Biſhops, Temporal Lords, and Commons, ſo I ſhall proceed to explain the like Phraſe of Communitas Regni, or le Commun de la Terre, as it is in French, that is, the Community or Body of the Kingdom, which we find ſo often mention'd in the Records of this time; and to this purpoſe I ſhall produce ſome other Authorities, that have been likewiſe made uſe of by the [*] Doctor himſelf, which, I hope, I ſhall be able ſo to turn againſt him, as further to make out, that the Biſhops, Lords, and Tenants in Capite, did not then make the whole Community or Repreſentative Body in Parliament. The firſt Record to this purpoſe is to be found in the [†] Patent Rolls of the Forty ſecond of this King, which is in the nature of a Declaration, beginning thus, ' Rex Omnibus, &c. wherein He recites, That having on the Quindene of Eaſter laſt paſt ſummon'd the ' Great Men, and Others his Liege-Subjects, for divers arduous Affairs, touching Himſelf and the Kingdom, and chiefly concerning ' the Proſecution of the Buſineſs of Sicily, which was then treated ' of, they then anſwered Him, that if He would eſtabliſh the State of his Kingdom by the Advice of his Liege-Subjects, and that the Pope would better the Conditions concerning the matter of Sicily, by which they might proſecute that Buſineſs to effect, (the reſt I ſhall give you in the Original Latin) ipſi diligentiam fideliter apponent ergà Communitatem Regni noſtri quod nobis Commune Auxilium ad hoc præſtetur, i. e. that then they would faithfully do their Endeavour with the Community of his Kingdom, that a Common Aid ſhou'd be given Him for this Purpoſe; from whence you may obſerve, that taking the Words Proceres and Fideles in this Writ, in the Doctor's own Senſe, the former for the Biſhops and Lords, and the latter for the Tenants in Capite, who were called to this Great Counſel to conſult about the Buſineſs of Sicily, (which the King had before too raſhly accepted of for his Second Son Edmund from the Pope) yet tho' they were all met, they would do nothing, but give Him Advice, and could grant him no Commune Auxilium, i. e. Common Aids or Subſidies, without the Conſent of the Community of the Kingdom.

Now what can this Community here ſignify, but all the Eſtates? for all the great Lords and Tenants in Capite were met already, and if they alone had made up this Whole Community, or Body of the Kingdom, why could they not immediately have granted the King the Aſſiſtance He deſir'd (if they had a ſufficient Power ſo to do) without putting Him off with a Promiſe, that they would uſe their Endea-

Endeavour with the Community of the Kingdom, (which implies a diſtinct Order or Body of Men not there preſent) that this Aid or Subſidy ſhould be given Him another time, yet upon this condition, (as it is at the end of this Record) that the King promiſed them, He would amend the Eſtate of the Kingdom, per Concilium Proborum & Fidelium Hominum ſuorum, that is, by the Advice of his good and faithful Subjects.

So likewiſe in the next * Record of the ſame Year it appears, that the King not long after took an Oath, whereby He bound Himſelf to govern according as a Committee of Four and twenty Fideles or Faithful and Loyal Subjects ſhould direct, twelve of which were to be choſen out of the King's Council, and the other twelve by the Great Men of the Kingdom; and in the Concluſion of this Record, there is a Clauſe of like Import with the former, reciting, that the Earls and Barons had promiſed the King, provided the Affairs above-mentioned were perform'd, that they would labour that a Common Aid ſhould be granted Him by the Community of his Kingdom. This bears date the ſecond of May; from whence we may obſerve, that this Promiſe had been altogether in vain, if the Earls and Barons alone had made the Whole Community of the Kingdom.

* Printed at large in Dr. B's Append. p. 189.

I come now to the Parliament held this Year at Oxford, in purſuance of the late Agreement, where the Great † Men and Nobles of the Land appear'd on St. Barnabas day, (our Eleventh of July) with all ſuch as owed them Military Service; there with much ſtrugling they at laſt obtain'd, that the whole Government of the Kingdom ſhould be put into the hands of Four and twenty Perſons, twelve of which were to be choſen by the King, and twelve others by the Whole Community of the Kingdom; and theſe were for the future to chuſe the Chancellor, Juſtices, and other Officers, and alſo to have the Cuſtody of the King's Caſtles: And that by the Words Communitas Regni, which the Author here makes uſe of, muſt be comprehended another Body of Men beſides the Earls and Barons, appears by a * ſecond Writ or Declaration of this King in French, (mentioned alſo by the Doctor) which was iſſued out not long after the Diſſolution of this Parliament at Oxford, wherein is recited, that for the profit of his Realm, at the Requeſt of his † Great and Wiſe Men, and of the Community of his Kingdom, the King had conſented, that the twenty four Perſons above named ſhould have full power accordingly, and that whatever they ordain'd concerning the Eſtate of the Kingdom ſhould be firm and valid: by which it is plain, that this Ordinance was not made by the Great and Wiſe Men in the Doctor's ſenſe of the words, viz. the Earls and Barons only, but it had alſo the Conſent of another Body of Men called in French Comune de la terre, Community of the Kingdom, who, I ſuppoſe, were the ſame with the Commons in Parliament at this Day.

But becauſe * Doctor B. will not allow theſe Phraſes to be underſtood in this Senſe, but will have the Latin Words, Communitas Regni, and the French, le Comun de la Terre, to ſignify the whole Politick Body of the Kingdom, conſiſting of the Prelates, Earls and Barons, together with the leſs Tenants in Capite, (tho' oftentimes he omits them according as it will ſuit with the Record or other

* Vid. Gloſſ. p. 27, 28, 29, 30.

Quotation he makes uſe of) and hath brought ſeveral Authorities from antient Records, and ſome from Hiſtorians, to ſhew, that theſe Expreſſions ought to be taken in that Senſe he would put upon them, and no other: I ſhall therefore, for the ſatisfaction of my Reader, ſet down theſe Authorities of the Doctor, and then ſhew how egregiouſly he has wreſted the true Senſe and Meaning of the Words and Phraſes above-mention'd.

But firſt I muſt acknowledge, theſe Terms, Communitas Regni, or as in French, le Commune or Communaltie de la Terre, to have been often made uſe of in different Senſes in our Records and Hiſtories; as for inſtance, I grant the Words Communitas, le Comune & la Communalte, when put alone, ſignify in the barbarous Latin and French of that Age, any Civil or Politick Body of Men; but the determinate Senſe of theſe Words is only to be underſtood from thoſe with which they are joined in any Hiſtory or Record: Thus Communitas Regni, and le Comun de la Terre, when put alone, ſignifie the whole Body of the Kingdom or Nation, conſiſting of all Degrees or Orders of Men, but when join'd with Baronum, it means the whole Body of the Barons, called alſo the Baronage of England; and when the Word Clerus follows it in the Genitive Caſe, it ſignifies the whole Body of the Clergy both Superior and Inferior; but where this Communitas is put before Commitatus or Commitatuum, it then ſignifies the Community or Body of County or Counties, and by the Communitates Civitatum & Burgorum, are underſtood the Commons of Cities and Boroughs; as appears by the Record of the 34*th* of Edward I. which I have already made uſe of, and is cited by the * Doctor in his Gloſſary.

But he is ſo afraid of the Word Commons, leſt his Reader ſhould know that there were any ſuch thing in the Parliaments of thoſe times, that he will not uſe the Word, even then, when he allows them to have made a Third Eſtate of the Kingdom, as they did in this Thirty fourth Year of King Edward, of which I ſhall ſay more, before I have done with this Diſcourſe: But to return to the matter in hand; when the Words, Communitas Regni, are put after Comites and Barones, with the Conjunction et between them, they muſt then ſignify either a Different, or elſe a Larger Body of Men; for otherwiſe theſe Words would be ſuperfluous, and a vain Repetition of what was already expreſſed; and it is from the miſunderſtanding and miſapplying, or rather wreſting the Senſe of theſe Words, that the † Doctor hath fallen into ſuch groſs Miſtakes, both in his Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, and alſo in his Gloſſary.

And now I come to lay before you the Summ of the Doctor's Arguments for this his Notion and Conceit: In the firſt place he cites that Paſſage in Matt. Weſtminſter, which I have already made uſe of under the Year 1258, or Forty ſecond of this King, when it was ordain'd in the Parliament at Oxford, that for the Reformation of the Kingdom, the King Himſelf ſhould name Twelve Perſons, and the whole Community of the Realm, Twelve more, who being ſupported by the Royal Authority, ſhould undertake the Care of the whole Kingdom; and, ſays the Doctor, it appears upon Record that this Tota Terræ Communitas, was the Barones, or Proceres, or Magnates only, which were the ſame: And for proof of this, he quotes certain Letters * Patents of the Forty ſecond of this King, wherein it is recited, ‘ That He had granted Proceribus & Magnatibus ‘ Regni, that the Kingdom ſhould be reform'd by twelve Loyal or ‘ Faithful Perſons to be choſen out of his Council, and by twelve ‘ Others to be choſen by the ſaid Proceres or Great Men, who ſhould ‘ meet at Oxon at Whitſontide enſuing. In which the † Doctor makes theſe Obſervations: Firſt, That in the Margin of this Roll it is entred, Pro Rege & Baronagio, For the King and the Baronage. Secondly, The Perſons to whom He made this Grant, viz. the Proceres and Magnates Regni, the Great Men of the Kingdom. Thirdly, The Perſons who were to name the other Twelve by the King's Conſent, were the Ipſi Proceres, the very ſame Great Men firſt mentioned. And Laſtly, we ſee, that what the Record and the Hiſtorian deliver, was about the ſame buſineſs; ſo that upon the whole there can be no doubt, but that the Tota Terræ Communitas in the Hiſtorian, and the Baronagium, & Proceres Regni in the Record, were the ſame Perſons. So far the Doctor.

To which Authorities and Records I ſhall return this brief Anſwer, that the Doctor is very much beſide the Cuſhion in all theſe Inferences; for the Queſtion ſtill remains as it was before, who are meant by theſe words, the Barons or Baronage of England, and who are to be underſtood by the words Proceres and Magnates? for if the word Barones, mention'd by the Hiſtorian, are to be taken only for the Biſhops, Earls, and Great Barons of the Kingdom, what will become of the Doctor's Tenants in Capite, who (whatever they might have been antiently) were now, and had been for ſome time before King John's Charter, not Barons, but meer Commoners? as * Mr. Selden has ſufficiently proved in his Titles of Honour. But if the Doctor will have the words Barones and Baronagium to be taken in a larger ſignification, it may alſo include the Inferior Barons, or Lords of Mannors, who either might come in Perſon to this Parliament, or elſe have appear'd by their Repreſentatives the Knights of Shires; and in either of theſe ſenſes might be comprehended under the Baronagium Angliæ, as ſhall be more fully proved in another place, when we ſhall come to give an Account of the antient ſignification of thoſe Terms.

But as for the Magnates & Proceres, with whom (as the Doctor obſerves) the King made that Agreement, concerning the choice of the four and twenty Perſons to Govern and Reform the Realm; that more than Great Lords and Tenants in Capite might be comprehended under thoſe words, appears from the Paſſage I have already cited out of Knighton, that King Henry the Third granted, Magnatibus Terræ duas Chartas, &c. by which certainly this Author meant, that all other Gentlemen of Eſtates had an equal Intereſt in them by vertue of that Grant, or elſe they would never have given the King a Fifteenth of all their Moveables; and that the word Proceres is of the like comprehenſive Signification, you may find in Wikes's Chronicle, ad An. 1264, where ſpeaking of the Parliament of the 49th of this King, (to which All agree the Commons were ſummon'd) he has theſe words, Viceſimo die Nativitatis Dominicæ, facta eſt apud London per Comitem Convocatio non minima Procerum Anglicorum, i.e. on the 20th Day after our Lord's Nativity there was held no ſmall Aſſembly of the Chief Men of England by the Earl of Leiceſter: The Annals of Waverly call this Magnum Parliamentum, and Matt. of Weſtminſter, Magnus Tractatus de Pace, i. e. a great Treaty concerning the Peace. The Inference I ſhall make from theſe Hiſtorians, is, that the firſt of them compris'd the Commons under the word Proceres, or elſe wholly paſſed them by; and the other two take no notice at all of this great Change, which certainly they would have done, had the ſummoning of the Commons been then a new Inſtitution.

But admit I ſhould grant the Doctor all that he could in reaſon deſire, viz. that the word Barones in Matt.Weſtminſter ſhall only ſignify the Barons properly ſo call'd, and that by the Magnates and Proceres in the following Record, ſhall be underſtood only the ſame ſort of Perſons with whom the King made that Agreement concerning the four and twenty Councellors; does it from thence follow, that becauſe they were at that time the Chief Men in the Government, and made the greateſt Figure, as being the largeſt Proprietors of the Lands of the Kingdom; that therefore no other Perſons or Orders of Men had any thing to do in the granting of Taxes but themſelves? what will then become of all the leſs Tenants in Capite, who, not being Barons, could no more be comprehended under that Title, than the Knights of Shires, or Barons of the Cinque-Ports? but if, to mend the Matter, the Doctor's Friends will alledge, that theſe Tenants are to be underſtood under the Proceres and Magnates mention'd in the Record now cited, I have already ſhewn, that under the former of theſe words, the Commons may be compris'd, as well as the Lords and Tenants in Capite; and that by the latter, the Knights of Shires, nay, the chief Citizens of London, York, &c. may be ſo alſo, I ſhall further make out hereafter.

But this will here likewiſe ſerve to Anſwer another very material Objection of * Dr. Brady's, who ſays, in the firſt Volume of his Hiſtory, pag. 625, 627, 628, that by the Proviſions of Oxford recited in the † Annals of Burton, it is ordain'd, that the four and twenty Perſons above-mention'd (one half whereof were choſen by the King, and the other half by the Barons) ſhould reform the State of the Kingdom; and to this end have power to appoint three Parliaments in the Year, which they did accordingly: Then the Community of the Kingdom being met in Parliament, choſe twelve out of their Body to repreſent them in theſe Parliaments, to ſave the Coſt or Charges of the Community, who, with the King's Council, were to treat for the whole Community of the Realm upon all Publick Buſineſs; whoſe Names (being all of Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, and Great Tenants in Capite) the Doctor has there ſet down; as alſo the Names of the firſt Twenty four that made the Grand Committee, who were all of the ſame Order; from whence he infers, that the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons alone, were then the whole Community of the Kingdom, becauſe none but they were either the Electors, or the Perſons Elected to repreſent the whole Body. But to this it may be reply'd, that if this Argument hold good, then the leſs Tenants in Capite, not being Barons, had nothing to do in this Election, ſince they were at that time meer Commoners, by the Doctor's own Confeſſion; neither was any one of theſe Inferior Te-Tenants choſen to be of the firſt Twenty four Reformers, nor of this Committee of Twelve choſen by the Whole Community; ſo that let the Doctor's Friends ſay what they can, if the Words le Commune de la Terre ſhall be here taken for no others but the Barons properly ſo called, then this could be no Parliament or Great Council, according to the Form of King John's Charter.

But I ſhall here ſhew the Doctor's Miſtake; and that under theſe Words, le Comune de la Terre, another ſort of Men, viz. meer Commoners, are comprehended; for it does not follow, that becauſe none but Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, were choſen to be of the Council of the Twenty four, and of the Twelve that were to repreſent the Whole Community, therefore none but thoſe, of the ſame Order, were the Electors of thoſe Twelve; for this Community who choſe them to ſave the Coſt and Charges of all the reſt, as I have ſaid before, appear to have been, by this very Circumſtance, of a Quality much inferior to the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, for they were Men of ample Eſtates, and conſequently the Governing-Party in Parliament; and therefore ſuch a Community as the Doctor ſuppoſes, of all Barons, and great Tenants in Capite, and not one Commoner, wou'd never have given up all their Power of granting Taxes, and making Laws, into the Hands of thoſe twelve, only to ſave Charges.

The next thing I ſhall take notice of, is a Letter written after this Oxford Parliament (cited by Mr. Petyt in his Rights of the Commons, and to be found in * Matt. Paris) from the Community of the Kingdom to the Pope, againſt Adomar Biſhop Elect of Wincheſter, whereby it may be proved, that the Community conſiſted of Others beſides the Earls and Barons; the Title of this Letter is, Literæ miſſæ à Communitate Angliæ Domino Papæ; a Letter ſent from the Community of England to the Lord the Pope, and the Direction thus, Sanctiſſimo in Chriſto Patri, Alexandro, divinâ Providentiâ Sanctæ Univerſalis Eccleſiæ Summo Pontifici, Communitas Comitum, Procerum, Magnatum, Aliorumque Regni Angliæ, cum ſubjectione debitâ, Pedum Oſcula Beatorum, &c. which runs thus in Engliſh:

* Additamenta fol. 217.

To the Moſt Holy Father in Chriſt, Alexander, by Divine Providence, Pope, or Great Biſhop of the Univerſal Church, the Community of the Earls, Noblemen, Barons, Great Men and Others of the Kingdom of England, with due Subjection kiſs your Bleſſed Feet, &c.

This Letter was ſeal'd, as the Record ſays, by ten of the ſaid Committee of Twelve Perſons, to whom the Whole Power of the Kingdom was committed, and were all Great Earls and Barons of the Kingdom, whoſe Names you may find in Matt. Paris, and not one Inferior Tenant in Capite among them.

From which Citation in the Author above-mention'd, † Dr. B. falls upon his Antagoniſt Mr. P. with theſe puzling Queſtions; ‘Did theſe Perſons, all Great Earls and Barons, repreſent the Whole Commons or Community of England, as at this day underſtood? Or did they repreſent the Community of the Barons only, together with the Alios, the Milites, which held by Military Service of the Great Barons, and the Leſs Tenants in Capite? For the Whole Com-

† B. A. P. p. 81.

‘ munity here intended, muſt be One of them : Let him faſten upon ‘ which he will, he muſt yield his Aſſertion; for certainly theſe ‘ Great Earls, and Barons, that ſealed this Letter, Vice totius Com- ‘ munitatis, were neither choſen, nor ſent by the Commons to this ‘ Parliament, or Meeting; nor were the Commons repreſented as at ‘ this day by them.

The Doctor farther inſiſts upon the Pope's Letter, in anſwer to the Petitions of the Community of England ſent before to his Court, &c. which is directed thus, To our beloved Sons, the Noblemen, Counſellers of our moſt dear Son in Chriſt, the Illuſtrious King of England, and the other Noble and Great Men of the Kingdom of England, Greeting and Apoſtolical Benediction.

The * Doctor here undertakes to frame ſome Anſwers for Mr. P. ſuch as he thinks fitting, which not being very much to the purpoſe, I ſhall try to mend them : As to the firſt Query, whether theſe Perſons there named, being all Earls and Barons, did repreſent the Commons or Community, as at this day underſtood ? To which I anſwer, Yes; that theſe Lords, being only a Committee of Parliament, might as well repreſent all the Commons as now underſtood, as they did the Alios, the Milites, who held by Military Service of the Great Barons, and the Leſs Tenants in Capite, which the Doctor himſelf thereby allows to be part of this Community; and then ſure it did not conſiſt of Earls and Barons only, (as he has before aſſerted) ſo that if they repreſented thoſe, who by his own Confeſſion were no Barons, and who then made far the greateſt part of the Doctor's Community, I deſire his Friends to tell me, Why theſe Great Earls and Barons might not alſo repreſent all the reſt of the Commons of England, as at this day underſtood? and therefore his Concluſion, that the Earls and Barons who ſeal'd this Letter on the behalf of the whole Community, were not choſen by the Commons, nor were they repreſented as at this day, is very precarious.

* Ibid. p. 82.

But that the Communitas Regni, or le Comune de la Terre, whom this Committee of Earls and Barons muſt certainly repreſent, conſiſted of more than the Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite, may farther appear by that Writ or Proclamation in Old Engliſh, which is to be found upon the † Roll of this Year, and was firſt publiſhed by Mr. Somner in his Saxon Dictionary, intitled Unnan, the Contents of which are, to confirm and reinforce whatſoever the Great Men or Counſellers, choſen by the King Himſelf and the Loandesfolk (as it is in the Old Engliſh) People of the Land had done, or ſhall do; now tho' by this Word Loandesfolk, I will not affirm the Commons alone are to be underſtood, any more than by the Latin Tranſlation of it, where it is render'd à Gentis Plebe, and in French, par le Commune de la Terre; yet that the Loandesfolk, or People of the Land, muſt ſignify ſome Others beſides Great Lords and Tenants in Capite, appears from the Comprehenſiveneſs of the Word it ſelf. And further, that this la Comune or Gentis Plebs, were a larger body of Men than the Council of Twenty four, or Committe of Twelve above-mentioned, is made ſtill more evident by the juſt Remark of that Learned Prelate, (the now Lord Biſhop of Carliſle, in theſe Words, ‘ I ſee the Biſhop of Worceſter, ‘ the Earls of Leiceſter, Gloceſter, Warwick, &c. (who were all Mem- ‘ bers

'bers of that Council) are named as Witneſſes to it; and, to my 'Apprehenſion, it looks a little incongruous that a Grant ſhould be 'atteſted by thoſe very Perſons to whom it is made. For theſe 'Reaſons I am yet of Opinion that this ſame Saxon Record is fault'leſs, both in the Original and Tranſlation; that it was given and 'granted to the uſe and behoof of thoſe Members of Parliament, 'who were choſen by the Commons of England, and that it as unde'niably proves them to be of a more antient ſtanding than the '49th Hen. III.

But as for his Obſervation concerning the Pope's Anſwer to the Barons Letter, being directed only to the Noblemen, Counſellors, and other Great Men of England, and not to the Whole Community, there is no great difficulty to reply to that; for ſince the Pope very well knew, that the Whole Power of the Parliament was now lodged in the Four and twenty Great Men above-mention'd, it was needleſs for Him to direct his Letter to any Other, becauſe they only were to receive, and return an Anſwer to it, if there were Occaſion.

And that by the Community of England, muſt be underſtood a larger body of Men than Doctor B. will allow of, will ſtill more evidently appear by a remarkable Paſſage out of the * Annals of Burton, under the Year 1259, being the Forty third of this King, and the Year after the Parliament that was held at Oxon, whilſt the Power of this Committee of Lords, Barons and Counſellors ſtill continued: The Paſſage I ſhall here faithfully tranſlate; 'The Feſtival of St. Edward the Confeſſor being Royally celebrated by 'the King at Weſtminſter, the † Community of the Bachelary of England 'declared to the Lord Edward the King's Son, the Earl of Glouceſter, and the other Perſons ſworn at Oxford, that the King had 'done, and fulfilled all things which the Barons had provided and 'impoſed upon Him to be perform'd, and that the Barons had acted 'nothing as they had promiſed for the Benefit of the Common-Weal, 'but only for their own private Profit, and to the damage of the 'King in every particular; and that unleſs there were a Reforma'tion of it, other means ſhou'd be uſed to make good their Agree'ment; whereupon the Lord Edward preſently anſwered for Him'ſelf, that tho' He had unwillingly taken an Oath at Oxford, yet 'however He ſhou'd be ready of his own accord to diſcharge, and 'to venture his Life for the Community of England, and for the Pro'fit of the Common-Weal, according to what He had there ſworn; 'and then He particularly declar'd to the * Barons ſworn of the 'Council, that unleſs they fulfill'd their ſaid Oath, He would ſtand 'by the Community till death, and make them to perform what they 'had promiſed: At length the Barons perceiving that it was better to have their Promiſes perform'd by themſelves than by Others, agreed to what He propoſed, and held another Aſſembly or Parliament at Michaelmas following.

† Communitas Bachelerix.

* That is, the Twenty four Lords of the King's Council.

And it ſeems this Remonſtrance had ſo good an Effect upon them, that this Committee of the Twenty four being again aſſembled, they made and publiſhed certain Laws or Proviſions that follow in theſe Annals, the Title of which being tranſlated out of French, runs thus:

Theſe are the Proviſions and Eſtabliſhments made at the Parliament at Weſtminſter, at the Feaſt of St. Michael, by the King and his Council, and the Twelve elected by the Common Council of the Kingdom; after which follow theſe remarkable Words in French, Pardevant le Communaute d' Engleterre que adunk fu a Weſtminſter le an del Regne Henry le fiz le Rei Jehan quarantieme Terz, i. e. before the Community of England, which was then at Weſtminſter in the Forty third Year of the Reign of Henry the Son of King John.

From whence we may obſerve, that notwithſtanding the late Ordinance which transferr'd the Whole Power of the Parliament to theſe Four and twenty Perſons, yet the Community of England (by which I underſtand the Bachelary or Commons of it) were preſent at this Parliament; and tho' they might not then make Laws, (which ſeems to have been the Buſineſs of the Four and twenty above-mention'd) yet their Province might ſtill be to repreſent the Publick Grievances of the Nation; as appears by this their Remonſtrance, upon which the above-mention'd Proviſions were enacted.

And that by this Community of the Bachelary of England, who remonſtrated againſt the unfair Proceedings of the Barons, (and were alſo preſent at this Parliament) not the Tenants in Capite alone, but alſo meer Commoners are to be underſtood, will appear by comparing this Paſſage in the Annals with another Tranſaction mention'd by Wikes's Chronicle in the Year 1264, wherein it is related, that a great many of the ordinary People of ſeveral Cities and Towns taking up Arms, (and calling themſelves by the Name of the Batchelary) ran up and down, and did much prejudice to the better ſort of Citizens and Townſmen: I do not cite this, as if theſe were any other than the meer ordinary People, or Mobb and Rabble (as we now call them) but only to ſhew, that theſe to imitate their Betters call'd themſelves by the ſame name; and Matt. Paris under the Year 1249, ſpeaks of a great Torneament at Brackley, where many of thoſe Knights of the Univerſity of the Kingdom, who will be called Bachelors, were ſlain; ſo likewiſe in the * Patent-Rolls of Richard II. He immediatly after his Coronation appointed certain Perſons to be of his Council, viz. two Earls, two Barons, two Bannerets, and four Bachelors: Now theſe laſt were as certainly Knights Bachelers, as the other were Knights Bannerets; and to make it yet more evident, it appears, that the Knights of Shires and Burgeſſes, are called in the French Inſtrument of the Depoſition of this King, which then paſſed in Parliament, the Bachelers and Commons of the Land, and are reckoned as a diſtinct Eſtate: And even at this day we know, that a Knight Bacheler is the loweſt Order of Knighthood proper to what is called the leſs Nobility, viz. Knights and Gentlemen.

Printed at the end of the X Scriptores.

From what hath been already ſaid, I think we may draw this Concluſion, that this Community of the Bachelary was looked upon in the Reign of Henry the Third, as part of the Civil Body of the Kingdom, but yet were not Tenants in Capite; and therefore muſt be ſuch Knights and Gentlemen, who holding of other Lords beſides the King, came up to this Solemnity of the Feaſt of St. Edward, and were alſo preſent at the enſuing Parliament: And that theſe Inferior Tenants made a conſiderable Figure in the Government in thoſe Times, appears by theſe Paſſages out of * Bracton, where reckoning up all the principal Lay-Orders and Degrees of Men in Chriſtian Kingdoms, he ſays thus, Sunt Duces, Comites, Barones, Magnates ſive Vavaſſores, & Milites, & etiam Liberi Homines, & Villani, & diverſæ Poteſtates ſub Rege Conſtitutæ, i. e. There are Dukes, Earls, Barons, and Great Men, or Vavaſſors, and Knights, and alſo Freemen, and Inhabitants of Towns, and divers Powers, or Magiſtrates appointed under the King; and a little lower (ſpeaking of England in particular) ſunt & alii Potentes ſub Rege, qui dicuntur Barones, hoc eſt, Robur Belli; ſunt & alii qui dicuntur Vavaſſores, Viri magnæ Dignitatis, i. e. there are other Perſons under the King, called Barons, as alſo Others called Vavaſſors, Men of great Dignity. Now that by theſe laſt are always underſtood not Tenants of the King in Capite, but of Biſhops, Abbots, and other Meſne Lords, ſee Sir Henry Spelman and Du Freſne, their Gloſſaries under that Title; and that theſe were the Perſons that then made this Bachelery of England, mention'd in the Annals above-cited, I think we have no reaſon to queſtion, after all that has been ſaid on this Head.

Near ſix Years having been ſpent in Diſputes and Quarrels between this King and the Barons, about his not obſerving the Proviſions made at Oxford, they were at laſt for a time decided by the Battel of Lewes, where the King, his Brother the Earl of Cornwal, and their Sons, were all made Priſoners.

The King being under the Power of Simon Montfort, the Head of the Baron's Faction, was forced by him to call a Parliament to be held at Weſtminſter eight Days after Trinity-Sunday, or two and twentieth of June, being the Forty eighth Year of this King, A. D. 1264, to which (beſides the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, particularly ſummon'd) there were alſo four Knights to be return'd by the Conſervators of each County, according to the Writs or Commiſſions above-mention'd: When this Parliament was thus Aſſembled, they agreed upon an Inſtrument, which is on Record, and enter'd under this * Title, which I ſhall put into Engliſh.

This is the Form of the Peace unanimouſly approved of by our Lord the King, and the Lord Edward his Son, and all the Prelates, and Barons, together with the whole Community of the Kingdom of England: it is thus, That a certain Ordinance was made in the Parliament held at London, about the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt laſt paſt, for preſerving the Peace of the Kingdom, until ſuch time as a Peace between the ſaid Lord the King, and the Barons at Lewes, according to the Form of a certain Miſe or Agreement, ſhould be fully concluded. From which we may obſerve, that not only the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, but the four Knights return'd for each County, now made the Community of the Kingdom.

* Rot. Pat. 48. H. 3. m. 6. Dorſ. See it at large in Dr. B's. Appendix to his 1ſt Vol. of Compleat Hiſt. N. 213.

But ſince Dr. Brady doth all he can to prove, that this Community of the Kingdom here mention'd, did not comprehend the Community of the Commons, but only of the Prelates and Barons, I ſhall give you his * Argument, which he draws from certain Paſſages out of this Ordinance, whereby it was appointed that three Perſons ſhould be choſen, who ſhould have Power and Authority from the King to chooſe or name Nine Counſellors, Three whereof ſhould always always be with the King ; and He by their Advice, ſhould order and diſpoſe of the Government of his Caſtles and Forts, and all other Buſineſs of the Kingdom ; and alſo by the ſame Advice ſhould chooſe his Judges, Chancellor, Treaſurer, and other Officers great and ſmall, either of the Court or Kingdom ; and when any of theſe Nine were to be removed, and others choſen, it was to be done by the Advice of the firſt three Electors ; Et ſi videatur Communitati Prælatorum & Baronum Concorditer expedire, &c. and if it ſhould ſeem expedient to the Community of the Prelates and Barons, to have all, or one of the three firſt nominated or elected removed, and others put in their places, Dominus Rex per Conſilium Communitatis Prælatorum & Baronum, alium vel alios ſubſtituat, the King was to ſubſtitute another or others by the Counſel of the Community of the Prelates and Barons. And to confirm this, the Doctor cites Matthew of Weſtminſter, who (he ſuppoſes) makes it more plain, what the Tota Communitas Regni, the whole Community of the Kingdom was, which made this Ordinance : Convenientibus Londini, Prelatis, Commitibus & Baronibus partis illius, quæ Regem ſuum tam Seditioſè tenuit Captivatum, Compromiſſi Lewenſis immemores, &c. Statuentes, quod duo Comites & unus Epiſcopus (which were the Earls of Leiceſter and Gloceſter, and Biſhop of Chicheſter) ex parte ipſius Communitatis electi, novem perſonas eligerent, i. e. (ſays he) the Prelates, Earls, and Barons of that Party, who ſeditiouſly kept the King in Priſon, met at London, and unmindful of the compromiſe at Lewes, determin'd, that two Earls and one Biſhop, to be choſen on behalf of, or by that Community, ſhould chooſe Nine, &c. we ſee, he ſays further, that the Tota Communitas Regni Angliæ, in the Preamble to the Ordinance upon Record, was the ſame with the Community in the Hiſtorian, and were the Community of Prelates, Earls, and Barons, &c.

I think there may be no great difficulty in anſwering this forced Interpretation, concerning the Community of England, if we conſider, in the firſt place, the Title to this Form of Agreement, which is ſaid to be made, by the King, the Prelates and Great Men, with the whole Community of the Kingdom ; which laſt words would be a vain repetition, if they comprehended no more than thoſe that went before ; and therefore, tho' it be there ordained, that the Nine Councellors above-mention'd, were to be choſen by the Advice of the Three firſt Electors ; and that if it ſhould ſeem expedient to the Community of the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, to remove any three of the firſt Electors, &c. the King was to ſubſtitute others in their places by the Council of the Community of the Prelates and Barons, yet this makes nothing to the Matter before us ; for the Community of the Prelates and Barons here mention'd, is a different Body from the Tota Communitas Angliæ ; this ſignifying the whole Body of the Commons, diſtinct from the Biſhops and Lords, and the other the Committee of Prelates and Barons, which conſiſted of Nine Perſons, who were to remove any of the three firſt Electors, and nominate others in their places ; and this appears by the next words following, in this Form or Ordinance, viz. Omnia autèm predicta Dominus Rex faciet per Concilium predictorum Novem in formâ ſubſcriptâ, vel Ipſi, vice & auctoritate Domini Regis, i. e. but all the Matters aforegoing, the King ſhall perform by the Council of the aforeſaid Nine, or they themſelves ſhall do it on the behalf, and by the Authority of our Lord the King.

If the Doctor would have been pleas'd to have added theſe words to what went before, it would have hinder'd any body from confounding (as he doth) this ſmall Body of Prelates and Barons with the Community of the whole Kingdom: And then, after this, it will be very eaſy to anſwer the Authority of Matt. Weſtminſter; and his not mentioning any Others to have met at London, beſides the Prelates, Earls, and Barons may be eaſily accounted for, ſince imitating Matt. Paris, he only recites the moſt conſiderable Members or Eſtates who met at this Parliament; and if this Author's Expreſſions ſhould be ſo taken as to exclude all others, beſides the Orders above-mention'd, what will become of the Doctor's beloved Tenants in Capite, who being no Barons could have no place in this Parliament? And here I cannot but obſerve the Doctor's unfair tranſlation of theſe words, Ipſius Communitatis, in this Author, which he renders, of that Community, viz. of Prelates and Barons mention'd a little before; whereas there is in this Author a Full-Stop inſtead of a Coma, after the word Captivatum; and the next Sentence begins with ex parte ipſius Communitatis electi, i. e. there were elected on the behalf of the Community it ſelf Nine Barons, tho' the Doctor to conceal this falacy ſtops at the word Nine, with an &c.

And further, this Writer's Inconſtancy, and how he can have this Community of the Kingdom to conſiſt either of fewer or more Members, according to the Hiſtory or Record he is to make uſe of, will appear by a French * Record, which he cites immediately before this Form of the Peace here mention'd; where, for redreſſing the Grievances of Holy Church, and the Injuries done to her in the time of the late Troubles, three Biſhops were to be choſen per commun: aſſentment du Roy, & des Prelats, des Countes, & des Barons de la Terre; by the common aſſent of the King, and of the Prelates, Earls, and Barons of the Land, to whom, ſoit done plein poer du Roy, e de le Communaute des Countes & des Barons, & des Grauntz Homes de la Terre, ſhould be given full Power from the King, and the Community of the Earls and Barons, and of the Great Men of the Land, to provide and order things neceſſary and profitable for the full Reformation of the ſtate of Holy Church, to the Honour of God, and the Faith of the Lord the King, and the profit of the Realm; E ceo ſoit promis en bon foi par le Roy, & par les Contes e les avandits Barons & par les autres Grauntz Homes de la Terre; and ſo it was faithfully promiſed by the King, and by the Earls, and the foreſaid Barons, and other Great Men of the Land. Now (ſays he) the other Great Men of the Land were great Tenants in Capite, that were actually neither Earls nor Barons; and theſe altogether are here eſteemed part of the Community of the Land, as well as they are called the Earls, Barons, and Great Men of the ſame; and by putting the chief part of the Tenants in Capite for the whole, are oftentimes called the Community of the Land, or Kingdom.

* Rot. Pat. 48. Hen. 3. m. 2. Dorſ. n. 14. Ib. p. 28.

Here you ſee, by the Doctor's own Confeſſion, not only the Prelates and Barons, but the leſs Tenants in Capite, who were neither Earls, nor Barons, made up the Community of the Kingdom, and conſequently the Prelates and Barons did not conſtitute it alone, as he confidently aſſerts in the very ſame Page; but if theſe Tenants in Capite were no Barons, I will leave it to the Doctor's Friends to conſider, whether there were not Commons in Parliament a Year before the 49th of Henry the Third, unleſs they can ſhew me, that theſe Tenants in Capite were a third ſort of People, who were neither Lords nor Commons. But to ſay ſomewhat more to the Record it ſelf (part of which he hath here cited) it appears, that notwithſtanding the three Biſhops that are ſaid to be choſen by the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, yet they could not have full Power of acting without the conſent of other Great Men of the Realm, as appears by the Record it ſelf; and therefore this Community of the Earls and Barons alone, could not be the whole Community of the Kingdom, without the Grantz Homes de la Terre here mention'd, whom tho' he will have to ſignify the Body of the Tenants in Capite, yet, notwithſtanding his poſitiveneſs, I may with more reaſon aſſer, that theſe Great Men here mention'd, were the Knights of Shire, call'd Grantz des Counties, or Great Men of the Counties, in divers Parliament-Rolls, which the Doctor himſelf acknowledges in another place; only * there affirms, that, without doubt, they were moſt commonly the greateſt Tenants in Capite, under the degree of Barons, in each County; the Truth of which Aſſertion ſhall be conſider'd in another place: but at preſent it is ſufficient to ſhew, that theſe Great Men mentioned after the Barons in this Record, as here cited by the Doctor, were not the Tenants in Capite, but the four Knights, that were return'd to this Parliament by the Conſervators of the Kingdom, and were without doubt choſen and impower'd by their reſpective Counties, tho' (the Writs of Summons being now loſt) it cannot be from thence ſo fully made out, as otherwiſe it might.

* B. A. J. Pag. 214.

But the next Parliament held in the Forty ninth Year of this King will evidently clear up this matter, and ſhew us who then made up this Community of the Kingdom: For Simon Montfort having (as I have ſaid before) got the King in his Power, iſſued out Writs in his Name, for a Parliament to meet at Weſtminſter, on the Octaves of St. Hillary (or twenty ſecond of January) next enſuing; by which were ſummon'd, not only the * Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls and Barons, but almoſt all the Abbots and Priors of England; and beſides theſe, other Writs of Summons were alſo ſent to the Sheriffs of the Counties to elect and return two Knights for each Shire and two Citizens, and as many Burgeſſes for each City and Borough of England, and for each of the Cinque-Ports as many Barons, as appear ſtill upon † Record in the Tower, which is likewiſe taken notice of by the Writer of the * Annals of the City of London; only he miſtakes in the number of the Knights of Shires, making them to have been four inſtead of two, and the like he does in the number of the Citizens, Burgeſſes and Barons of Cinque-Ports, that were ſummon'd.

This being, I hope, made clear enough, I ſhall in the next place ſhew you how confidently and groſly the Doctor can impoſe upon his Readers; he hath in his * Gloſſary given us the Title to this Inſtrument of the Form of the Peace between the King and the Barons, which I ſhall here tranſlate; The Ordinance which was provided at London by the Common Accord of the Prelates and Great Men of the Realm, who were there in the Month of June, in the Forty eighth Year of the King, ſhall be firmly obſerved and maintain'd in the Form as follows, &c. by this Record (ſays the Doctor) it is plain, that the Tota Communitas Regni Angliæ, the whole Community of the Kingdom of England, by whoſe Common Accord this Ordinance was made at London in the Month of June preceding, in the Forty eighth Year of Henry the Third, were the Prelates and the Hauz Homes, that is, the Great Men of the Land, or Men of High Condition; hitherto the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, or the Prelates and Great Men, or the Prelates and Hauz Homes, Men of High Condition, have by Record and Hiſtory both appeared to be the Community of the Kingdom.

I muſt animadvert upon this Obſervation of the Doctor's, and deſire his Friends (if they pleaſe) to anſwer for him, why in the beginning of this Record by the Prelates and Great Men muſt be underſtood only Earls, Barons, &c. and Men of High Condition? when it is plainly manifeſt, by the ſubſequent part of it, that in this preſent Parliament, the Repreſentatives of the Commons made a part of the Community of the Kingdom, tho' he is not willing to take any notice of it.

But to ſhew you this Gentleman's Sincerity, he hath here recited the firſt Clauſe, (which I have tranſlated) and has render'd Le Comun de la Terre, the Commons of the Land; but then ſpeaking of thoſe Letters Patents that were to remain in every County, he hath this Remark, viz. In one of theſe Letters-Patents, or Charts, ſent into York-ſhire, it is evident, that the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Community of the Kingdom ſignified the ſame thing, or that the Community of the Kingdom ſignified very little, if any thing, as to the tranſacting of Publick Affairs in thoſe Days: and then he gives us at large a Copy of one of the Writs in Latin, which was ſent down into the County of York, wherein it is recited, that by the unanimous conſent of the King, and of the Lord Edward his Eldeſt Son, and of the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Community of the Kingdom, and for the Peace and Security thereof, the Lord Edward, and Henry Son to the King of the Romans had been deliver'd as Hoſtages; wherefore it is there provided, that a certain Ordinance made in the 28th Year of this King's Reign, by the Prelates, &c. (viz. all the reſt of the Parties above-mention'd) ſhall be inviolably obſerv'd: Upon which the Doctor thus learnedly Paraphraſes; here the Prelates, Earls, and Barons muſt be the ſame with the Prelates, Earls, Barons abovemention'd, and the Commons of the Kingdom had nothing to do in making the Ordinance at London in the Month of June, concerning the ſtate of the Kingdom; and yet in the Preamble of it 'tis ſaid they had.

I ſuppoſe the Doctor was here ſenſible, tho' he doth not ſhew it, that the Commons were now ſummon'd to this Parliament, or elſe he would never have ſo far debaſed this Community of the Kingdom, as to affirm, 'That they ſignified very little, if any thing, as to the 'tranſacting Publick Affairs in thoſe Days, whereas but in the * Leaf 'before (ſpeaking of the leſs Tenants in Capite) he calls them the Other 'Great Men of the Land, that were neither Earls nor Barons, and 'who altogether made part of the Community of it: And in the ſame place adds further, 'That putting the chief part of the Tenants in Capite for the whole Body of them, theſe are oftentimes 'called the Community of it: So that you ſee ſometimes the whole Body, and ſometimes but a part of it are ſufficient (according to the Doctor's Notions) to conſtitute the whole Community or Repreſentative of the Kingdom in Parliament.

* Ib. p. 29.

But why the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, (whom he grants in another † place to have come to the Parliament in the 49th of Henry the Third) ſhould not have the ſame Power as the leſs Tenants in Capite, in whoſe room they came, I can ſee no reaſon, eſpecially ſince he alſo aſſerts but a few * Pages further, that they were ſummon'd by Simon Montfort, to curb the too great Power of the Nobility and Tenants in Capite, occaſion'd by the large Retinues they brought along with them to the Parliament at Oxford. Thus the Doctor can advance or debaſe the Authority of his leſs Tenants in Capite, according as he thinks it will ſerve his preſent purpoſe.

† B. A. P. Pag. 136.

* Ib. p. 143.

But he is ſomewhat hard put to it in his laſt Obſervation upon this Writ above-mention'd; for ſince the words Communitas Regni happen to be there omitted, he therefore will not allow, that the Community even of his leſs Tenants in Capite had any thing to do in making the Ordinance of the Month of June precedent; and I ſuppoſe it was for this Reaſon, becauſe he was aware, if he ſhould allow, that the leſs Tenants in Capite (who were meer Commoners) had any hand in making the former Ordinance, in that Parliament of the 48th of Henry the Third, then it would follow, that the Repreſentatives of the Commons, who, as part of the Community, confirm'd the aforeſaid Ordinance in the 49th Year of this King, might have alſo had ſomething to do in other Parliaments before that time.

And therefore, the more to perplex this Matter, he recites the Clauſe I have already tranſlated, whereby the King, the Lord Edward his Son, and the Great Men and Commons of the Land, ſwore to obſerve the aforeſaid Ordinance; but the Doctor did not think fit to render theſe words into Engliſh, for then it would have appear'd, that the Commons, as well as the Lords, took this Oath, and conſequently that thoſe words were not a meer Chimera or vain Repetition, without any ſignification, as the Doctor will have them to be; and therefore, after a recital of what Puniſhment thoſe were to undergo, who ſhould act contrary to this Form of the Peace, he tells us, the next words in this ſame Record are, E ceſte choſe eſt firmement eſtabli par le Roy, Munſir Edward, e par le Comun de la Terre: And this was firmly eſtabliſh'd by the King, and Monſieur Edward, and by the Commons of the Land, as if they only made this Eſtabliſhment. Can any Man imagine, that the Prelates, Earls, and Barons were not preſent, and conſenting to the making of this part of the Form of Peace? 'Tis ſaid in the * Charters, or Letters-Patents, directed to the County of Middleſex, that for the obſervation of both, by the unanimous conſent of King Henry, and Prince Edward his Son, and the Earls, Barons, and Community of the Realm, it is ordain'd, that thoſe that act againſt this Statute ſhall be diſinherited, &c. And in the Margin over-againſt the words Comun de la Terre he hath this Note. In this place the Community of the Land ſignifies the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and Great Men, or theſe Eſtabliſhments were made without them, which is a contradiction to both theſe Records: And then he concludes, So we ſee that in this part of the Record, Le Comun de la Terre, or the Community of the Land comprehended the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, and in other parts of it, the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, were mention'd as the Community of the Land. In anſwer to this, I need but obſerve how much the Doctor can contradict and vary from himſelf in two pages; for whereas * he before acknowledges that the Inferior Tenants in Capite were part of the Community of the Kingdom in Parliament, now only the Prelates, Earls, and Barons muſt have any thing to do in it; and this proceeds either from his own Ignorant or perverſe Miſtake of the words, E par le Comun de la Terre, which he renders by the Commons of the Land, and then asks a puzling Queſtion, whether the Prelates, Earls, and Barons were not preſent and conſenting to the making this Form of Peace? which no body denies, denies, but by the Comun de la Terre here mention'd, is not to be underſtood the Commons of the Land, nor yet the Earls, Barons, and Great Men, according to his falſe Gloſs in the Margin; but the Community or Politick Body of the whole Kingdom in Parliament, as repreſented by the Prelates, Earls, Barons, with the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes for the Commons, who made a part of the Community of the Kingdom when this Form of Peace was made, as appears by the date of it being ſeal'd in the Parliament at Weſtminſter by the Parties there mention'd, on the eighth Day of March 1264, being the 49th Year of King Henry the Third, tho' it be not there expreſs'd; for this Parliament had began to ſit on the 22d of January, and was not Diſſolved till the middle of March, as appears by the * Charter of Pardon which was paſſed by this King to the Barons and Others of Montfort's Party, bearing date at Weſtminſter the 14th of March, in the 49th of his Reign; in which alſo there is this remarkable Clauſe; and further it is unanimouſly provided by Our (that is the King's) Aſſent and Will, and that of our Son Edward the Prince, the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, and the Community of our Kingdom, that the Antient Charters of Common Liberties and of Foreſts, already confirm'd to the Community of our Kingdom, by Our Selves and the Pope, as alſo all Articles already granted by our Own, and by the common Aſſent of the Great Men of the Kingdom, ſhall be inviolably held and obſerved: Which Paſſage evidently clears the diſtinction I have already made between the Communitas Regni, when coming after Comites and Barones, and the ſame words when put alone; for in the firſt ſenſe it ſignifies the Community, or le Comun de la Terre, that is, the Commons of the Kingdom, and in the other, the whole Civil Body of it, to whom theſe Charters were granted. And, to conclude this Head, it is manifeſt, that the Doctor's confounding of theſe two Phraſes, has lead him into theſe (I doubt) wilful Miſtakes; for had he acquainted his Readers, that the Commons had been ſummon'd this time to Parliament, it would have ſaved him the trouble of Writing, and his Readers of peruſing two or three Pages to no purpoſe; yet ſince he is reſolved not to leave off ſo, but will have his Tenants in Capite to make the whole Community of the Kingdom, long after the time wherein he muſt allow the Knights of Shires, and Citizens, and Burgeſſes, to have been conſtantly ſummon'd to all Parliaments, I ſhall go on with him a Page further, and give you the reſt of his Authorities for this Opinion.

The firſt is a Writ from Pat. Roll of 30 Edw. I. m. 1. which I ſhall render in Engliſh, and refer you to the Doctor for the Latin of it: 'The King to the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Knights, and all Others of the County of Kent, Greeting, know ye, that on the firſt Day of June, in the 18th Year of our Reign, the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and the reſt of the Great Men of our Kingdom, by one Aſſent, for themſelves and the whole Community of the ſame Kingdom, granted unto Us in full Parliament, forty Shillings of every Knight's Fee in the ſaid Kingdom, for an Aid to marry Our eldeſt Daughter, &c. which Aid We have hitherto graciouſly forborn to levy for the eaſe of the ſaid Community, &c. By this Record it is very clear, that ſuch as paid Scutage, that is, ‘forty Shillings for a Knight's Fee, were the Tota Regni Communitas, and no Others: And of theſe, the Tenants in Capite granted, and paid it firſt for themſelves and Tenants, and then their Tenants in Military Service, by vertue of the King's Precept, paid it to them, for ſo many Fees as they held of them, as hath been ſufficiently evinced by Record in the Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, Fol. 121.

I will not deny, but that the Doctor may have truly tranſcribed this Writ, and yet for all that, it is not true, that the Prelates, Earls and Barons, and all Tenants in Capite of the County of Kent, were then in a ſtrict Senſe the whole Community of the Kingdom, ſince there were a vaſt number of Others that were a part of this Community, and that did not hold in Capite: And no County can be a better Inſtance of this than the County of Kent, where above two parts of three held in Gavelkind, which every one knows, was Soccage-Tenure; and therefore by the Words All Others of the County of Kent, in this Writ mentioned, muſt not only be underſtood of all ſuch as held in Capite: And ſo likewiſe, that by the whole Community of the Kingdom, cannot be meant only the Community of the Tenants in Capite; but that theſe Tenants firſt paid it for themſelves and their Under-Tenants: Tho' the * Doctor ſuppoſes, and endeavours to prove in his Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, that at the Parliament held in the Eighteenth Year of this King, the Knights of Shires were not ſummon'd; yet that this is a great Miſtake, I hope I ſhall be able to prove, when I come to conſider his Arguments.

* B. A. P. pag. 149, 150.

But that the Tenants in Capite did not make the whole Community of the Kingdom during this King's Reign, appears by the ſecond Record cited by the * Doctor from the Exchequer; by which it is plain, that the King ſummon'd a Parliament in the Thirty fourth Year of his Reign, to meet on the Morrow of the Holy Trinity about an Aid for making his Son a Knight, and aſſiſting Him againſt Robert Bruce, who was up in Arms with conſiderable Forces in Scotland; and the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men, as alſo the Knights of Shires, treating together, with deliberation upon this matter, conſidering the Aid that was due, and the Burthen that lay upon the King by reaſon of the Scotch War, at length unanimouſly granted Him for themſelves and the whole Community of the Kingdom, a Thirtieth part of all their Moveables, for making his Son a Knight, and toward the Expences of his War in Scotland; and then the Citizens and Burgeſſes, and other Tenants of the King's antient Demeſns, being aſſembled together, and treating about the Premiſſes, granted to the King a Twentieth part of their Moveables.

* Ib. p. 33. See in his Append. Rec. 4. p. 33.

Here the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Great Men, with the Knights of Shires conſulted together, and gave for themſelves and the whole Community of the Kingdom, a Thirtieth part of their Goods; and the Citizens, Burgeſſes and Tenants of the King's Demeſns, which were none of the Community of the Kingdom, gave a Twentieth part; for if they had been of the Community, they had paid no more than a Thirtieth part: And therefore 'tis moſt certain, at this time they were not taken to be part of the Community of the Kingdom, unleſs they paid both a Twentieth and a Thirtieth part of their Goods, and that the Tenants in Capite, or at leaſt the Military Men and Tenants in Military Service, were only ſuch.

The Doctor could not have brought a better Record than this, to have confuted the Falſity of his Notion, that the Tenants in Capite made the whole Community of the Kingdom, in the 34*th* Year of Edward I. and therefore I ſhall only ask thoſe of the Doctor's Opinion, whether thoſe Perſons that paid a Thirtieth part of their Goods towards this Tax above-mention'd, were All Tenants in Capite? if they ſay, Yes, then it will follow, that none but Tenants by Knight's Service could pay it, for their Lords the Tenants in Capite could not give Taxes for thoſe who did not hold of them; but if they ſay, No, which is the Truth, then neither the Tenants in Capite, nor thoſe by Military Service, (as the Doctor qualifies it at the end of this Paragraph) could alone make the Community of the Kingdom, ſince all Tenants by Petyt Seirjeanty and Soccage-Tenure muſt be likewiſe included in this Grant, and muſt therefore make a part of the Community, or Civil Body of the Kingdom. And tho' in his Marginal Note upon theſe Knights of Shires, ſitting and treating with the Earls and Barons, concerning the granting of this Aid, the Doctor ſays it was, becauſe they were of the ſame Order, that is, Tenants in Capite; this is a meer Conceit of his own, as I ſhall ſhew hereafter; and therefore I ſhall only obſerve at preſent, that theſe Knights of Shires could not grant this Tax upon Moveables, for themſelves and the whole Community of the Kingdom, as they were Tenants in Capite, but as they were the Repreſentatives of the Freeholders of the whole County, by whatſoever Tenure they held. As for the other part of the Doctor's Argument, that the Citizens and Burgeſſes, with the King's Tenants in antient Demeſn, gave by themſelves a Twentieth part of their Moveables, when all the reſt of the People paid but a Thirtieth, and therefore they were not then part of the Community of the Kingdom; I allow that theſe were not in that Record reckon'd as part of this Community, and the Reaſon might be, becauſe this Community of the Kingdom, extending ſtrictly to no Others, than thoſe who were a part of the Community of the Commons of Counties, the Cities and Boroughs being then (as now) ſeparate Bodies from the Counties, and enjoying diſtinct Priviledges in ſending their own Members to repreſent them in Parliament, were therefore in that Senſe no part of the Community of the Kingdom; yet as they paid a very conſiderable ſhare in all Taxes to the Government, which were granted by their Repreſentatives, they were certainly in a larger acceptation a part of the Community, or Politick Body of the Nation.

And this is alſo made out and confirm'd by another * Record of the Thirty fifth of this King, (which is alſo cited by the † Doctor) being a Writ for the collecting of this Twentieth and Thirtieth part, 'directed to the Knights, Freemen, and the whole Community of the 'County of Middleſex, reciting, that the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Knights, Freemen, and the Community of the 'ſaid County had kindly granted the Thirtieth part of all their 'Moveable Goods; and the Citizens, and Burgeſſes, and Communities of Cities and Boroughs of the ſame Kingdom, as alſo the 'Tenants of his Antient Demeſn, had granted a Twentieth part of 'their Moveables, &c. from whence we may obſerve, that as the People of the Counties in general are here called Communitas

Comitatuum,

* Vid. Dr. B's Append. Record 7. printed there at large.

† B. G. p. 33.

Comitatuum, ſo thoſe of the Cities and Boroughs are called the Communities or Commons of thoſe places, and certainly then, theſe ſeperate Communities muſt make a part of the General Community or Civil Body of the Kingdom.

Since we have now ſettled the true meaning of the words, Communitas Regni, or Le Comun de la Terre, and proved, that it always comprehends, and ſometimes ſignifies the Commons of England, only as repreſented by Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes in Parliament, I ſhall next proceed to ſhew, that the ſame Expreſſions are to be underſtood in a like ſenſe throughout the reſt of King Henry the Third's Reign, as alſo that of his Son King Edward; which brings me to the ſecond Head I undertook to treat of, that from the 49th of Henry the Third, to the 18th of Edward the Firſt, incluſively, the Commons were repreſented in Parliament by Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in the ſame manner as they are at this Day; but ſeeing the Writs of Summons to thoſe Aſſemblies, as well to the Biſhops and Temporal Lords, as to the Commons, from the 49th of Henry the Third, to the 23d of Edward the Firſt, are long ſince loſt, it is in vain to go about to prove, from ſuch Records, that there were any Parliaments at all; and therefore we muſt have recourſe, for the diſcovery of this Matter, to the Titles of Statutes, the Patent-Rolls in the Tower, and the concurrent Hiſtories and Chronicles of thoſe times.

I ſhall begin with the Statute of Marlbridge, made A. D. 1267, being the 52d Year of Henry the Third, which Statute has this Title before it; Convocatis Diſcretioribus ejuſdem Regni, tàm de Majoribus quàm de Minoribus ita proviſum eſt, & Statutum, i. e. there being ſummon'd the moſt diſcreet or wiſe Men of the Kingdom, as well of the Great as Leſs ſort, it is provided and ordain'd, &c. where by the leſs ſort of Men, I underſtand the Commons, put by way of diſtinction from the Lords; and this ſeems to be ſo worded, in imitation of the Saxon Great Councils, commonly ſtiled Wittena-Gemots, i. e. Aſſemblies of the Wiſe Men; but ſince Dr. Brady has endeavour'd to make out, that at this Parliament, not all the Barons of England were ſummon'd, but only ſome of the wiſer ſort, whom the King was pleas'd to call; I will defer the further conſideration of that Matter, till I come to examine the Doctor's Arguments.

In the next Year, viz. * 1269, being the 53d of this King, Tho. * Wikes tells us, a Parliament met at Weſtminſter, at the Feaſt of St. Edward (or ~~third~~ 13th of October) for the removal of his Relicts, and placing them in a richer Shrine; his words, as far as concerns the Matter in Queſtion, are as follow, * Convocatis Univerſis Angliæ Prelatis & Magnatibus, necnon cunctarum Regni ſui Civitatum pariter, & Burgorum Potentioribus, i. e. All the Prelates and Great Men of England, as alſo the principal or richeſt Men of the Cities and Boroughs of his Kingdom, being ſummon'd or call'd together, beſides a great crowd of ordinary People who flock'd thither: After the Solemnity of this Tranſlation was over, the Noblemen began, according to their cuſtom, to treat in Parliament about the Affairs of the Kingdom; and, in concluſion, there was a Tax granted by the Laity towards Prince Edward's Expedition to the Holy Land.

* T. W. Edit. Oxon.

And for a further confirmation of this, there are found in the Patent Rolls of this Year, two ſeveral French Charters of Pardon, which certainly were likewiſe granted in this Parliament; the * firſt of which recites, that the King, by the Advice and Conſent of his Brother, the King of the Romans, as alſo of the Earls, Barons, and Le Commune de la Terre, i. e. the Commons of the Kingdom, pardons the Earl of Gloceſter and his Adherents, all Treaſons, &c. The ſecond is on the ſame Roll, whereby the King, with the Advice of all the ſame Parties laſt mention'd, remits to the City of London all Rancour and Ill-will; from whence we may obſerve, that at this Parliament the Commons are again expreſſed by the French Phraſe, Le Comun de la Terre, which we may very well tranſlate (as well as Communitas Regni) the Commonalty or Commons of the Realm.

Dr. Brady takes no notice at all of this Parliament, in his Hiſtory; * a late Learned Writer (who too implicitly has follow'd the Doctor's Opinions) has undertaken to prove, that the Citizens and Burgeſſes were not then ſummon'd to Parliament: I ſhall firſt ſet down his Objections.

He indeed allows the Quotation to be as I have given it, yet ſays, that what Wikes relates imperfectly, the Annals of Waverly more fully diſtinguiſh, when they tell us, that in order to this Solemnity, a Convention or Aſſembly was held of the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Abbots, Priors, and Many Others. Now it is obſervable, (ſays the Doctor) that the firſt Author only ſays, That the Tranſlation being over, the Nobles treated, and gave the King the Twentieth part abovemention'd; ſo that here is a diſtinct Account of the Tranſlation, and of the Parliament; to the One a great Company of People flock'd together, and ſo were preſent at it with the Prelates and Great Men; but in the Other none but the Nobiles, Majores Regni, Prelati, Proceres & Magnates; and then the Doctor falls upon his Antagoniſt for making a falſe and deluſory Repreſentation of this Meeting. But, I doubt, upon Examination it will be found, that the former of theſe Doctor's is miſtaken in the ſenſe he puts upon this Quotation; and I ſhall leave it to the indifferent Reader to conſider, whether there is no difference to be made in this firſt Author's Relation, between the Citizens and Burgeſſes being here ſaid to be ſummon'd or call'd together, as well as the Biſhops, Earls, and Great Men, and the ordinary Sort or Common People, who flock'd thither only to gaze; or can any one believe it was worth the King's while to ſummon up the Chief Citizens and Burgeſſes from all the Cities or Boroughs of England, and to put them to the expence of ſo long a Journey, only to ſee a Show? I ſuppoſe no Man will ſay, this was ſuitable to the Methods of thoſe frugal Times, unleſs the King had other buſineſs with them, and what other Buſineſs could there be, beſides their granting the Twentieth part of all their Moveable Goods? 'Tis true, this Author mentions, that after this Solemnity was over, the Nobles treated of the Affairs of the Kingdom; which might be, and yet the Citizens and Burgeſſes who were not taken into ſuch Conſultations, might give their Conſents to the granting this Aid: And as for theſe Nobiles it is moſt likely, that by the Magnates mention'd in the Annals of Waverly, the

Knights

* Dr. Wake's State of the Church and Clergy. pag. 212.

Knights of Shires, called in the French Records Grantz des Counteès, were then reckon'd among the Nobiles minores. But to ſatisfy the Doctor, that this Tax was really given by the Commons, as well as by the Biſhops and Temporal Lords, I deſire he would once more conſider the words of the Waverly-Annaliſt, who calls this Parliament an Aſſembly, not only of all the Parties above-mention'd, but adds, & multorum Aliorum; and be pleas'd to tell us, who were theſe many Others, put after the Barons, unleſs the Commons as now underſtood? If it ſhould be anſwer'd, they were the leſs Tenants in Capite; to that it may be reply'd, that this is only gratis dictum, and it is more likely to be the Commons, for they were call'd to Parliament in the 49th Year of this King; and it does not yet appear, (but rather the contrary) that they were ever omitted being ſummon'd after that time. But to make this Point paſt diſpute, the Doctor may pleaſe to take notice of a * Writ on the Patent Rolls of this very Year, directed to certain Commiſſioners to levy this Tax of a Twentieth part upon Moveables in Dorſetſhire, wherein it is thus recited, Cum occaſione viceſimæ nobis in ſubſidium Terræ Sanctæ conceſſæ tàm à Magnatibus & Militibus, quàm aliis Laicis hominibus de Bladis, &c. This bears date the 14th of December after this Grant was made, with which the antient * Manuſcript-Annals of the City of London agree, and very well explain, who are meant by the Aliis Laicis Hominibus, and ſay expreſly, That in this Parliament all the Freemen of England, as alſo of the Cities and Boroughs granted to the King a Twentieth part of all their Moveable Goods, that is, they did it by their Repreſentatives, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, as Doctor Brady has very well explain'd it in his Gloſſary, concerning a like Aid granted to King Edward the Firſt, in the 34th Year of his Reign.

* Lib. de Legibus Ant. ad hunc An

In the following Year, viz. 1270, on the Monday after Eaſter, the ſame City-Annals tell us, That the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Knights, and Freeholders of the whole Realm, were aſſembled in Parliament at Weſtminſter by the King's Writs, and there they treated of divers Matters relating to the State of the Nation; but they were chiefly taken up in the reconciling Differences between Prince Edward and the Earl of Gloceſter.

The ſame Annals further mention another Parliament held at Wincheſter about Midſummer following, when the King took his Croſs (by which He ſtood ſtill engaged to undertake the Cruſado) and deliver'd it to the Prince his Son, which was confirm'd by the Suffrages of all there preſent, as appears by the * Patent or Commiſſion granted by the King to the Prince not long after for that purpoſe, wherein it is recited, That tho' He was deſirous to go (together with his Son) for the Relief of the Holy Land, yet becauſe it ſeemed to the Prelates, Great Men, and Commonalty of the Kingdom to be neither expedient nor ſafe for Himſelf and his Son to be both abſent at once, therefore He committed this Affair to the Prince alone. This bears date at Weſtminſter the fourth of Auguſt. Dr. Brady cites this Record, and will have the words Communitatem Regni here, to ſignify only the Community of Tenants in Capite, but I think I may with much better Authority affirm, that it here ſignifies the Community or Body of the Commons, as they were repreſented in the 49th Year of this King, as well as in ſeveral other Parliaments ſince that time; and I can ſee no reaſon why it ſhould not have the ſame ſignification in this, unleſs the meaning of Words and Phraſes in Records muſt alter, when ever it makes for the Doctor's Hypotheſis to have it ſo.

Thus I have gone through all the Great Councils or Parliaments held during the long Reign of Henry the Third, wherein I could find any mention of the Repreſentatives of the Commons as now underſtood; and therefore ſhall now proceed to that of his Son King Edward the Firſt, and prove, that they continued to be ſo repreſented from the very beginning, to the eighteenth Year of his Reign; and were it not for the unreaſonable Conceits of Dr. Brady, and thoſe of his Opinion, this ungrateful Task might very well be ſpar'd; for if the Commons are prov'd to have been ſummon'd to Parliament during all the reſt of the then late King's Reign, after the 49th, I can ſee no reaſon why they ſhould not continue to be ſo likewiſe in this; yet prejudices, either from Humour, Education, or too much relying upon the Authorities of Others, have made ſome learned Perſons to embrace ſuch falſe Notions, as that the Commons, after the Battel of Eveſham, were left off being ſummon'd any more till the eighteenth of King Edward the Firſt.

I am indeed ſenſible, that the loſs of the Writs of Summons to Parliament, both to the Lords and Commons, from the 49th of Henry the Third, to the twenty third Year of his Son's Reign, as alſo the general Words, in which ſome of the Titles to his Statutes of the beginning of his Reign are penn'd; together with the ſilence of Matt. Weſtminſter, and ſome other Hiſtorians, who have written this King's Life and Actions concerning the Commons being preſent in Parliament, and barely calling it Parliament, without any particular recital of the Conſtituent Members of it, have given Dr. Brady ſome occaſion to believe, that they were not ſummon'd again till the Fiftieth Year of this King; however, I hope I ſhall from the Titles to certain Statutes, as well as from other Records and Hiſtorians, prove, that the Doctor was miſtaken, and has lead divers well-meaning Men into the ſame Error.

I ſhall begin with the Firſt of this King's Reign we are now treating of; and here we find, that not long after the Nobility had met at the New-Temple, London, to recognize and ſwear Allegiance to Him, the Conſervators or Regents of the Kingdom, ſummon'd a Convention or Great Council of all the Eſtates at Weſtminſter. Thomas Walſingham indeed takes no notice of this Meeting, but Wikes's Chronicle, and the Annals of the Church of Worceſter, which were both written in this King's Time, give us a large Account of it, almoſt in the ſame words, which I ſhall faithfully tranſlate as follows; ' The Guardian's of the Kingdom having ſum-
' mon'd all the Eſtates thereof to meet at Weſtminſter, there Aſſem-
' bled the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Abbots, Priors, as
' alſo four Knights for each County, and four Citizens out of each
' City, and did all in the preſence of the Lords, William Archbiſhop
' of York, Robert de Mortimer, and R. Burnel, Clerk, take an Oath
' to the Lord Edward, as King of this Land, as alſo firmly and truly
' to keep the Peace of the Kingdom.

This Great Council or Convention, as I ſaid, is not mention'd by Walſingham, tho' it is by Matt. Weſtminſter, but he barely ſays in general, without naming any particular Degrees or Orders of Men, that the Nobiliores Regni were ſummon'd to it: Now under this Title we often find, not only the higher Nobility, but the Commons to be comprehended; which alſo ſhews, that the Arguments brought by Mr. Pryn and Dr. Brady, from Matt. Paris and this Author, for their only mentioning the Nobilitas or Nobiles Regni, to be ſummon'd to divers Parliaments in the Reign of Henry the Third, are no Proofs that the Commons, as well as the Biſhops and Temporal Lords were not comprehended under that Title, which I ſhall prove more at large by and by, when I come to anſwer the Doctor's Arguments.

The * Reverend Author of the State of the Church will not allow 'theſe four Knights to be any other than Tenants in Capite, whom 'this Convention of Nobles thought fit to call, to ſecure the Right 'of the King, and Peace of the Kingdom; and therefore will not give it the Name of a Parliament, but only of a Convocation, as the Annals of Waverly call it: I ſhall not diſpute about Words with him, but that it was a Great Council of the Kingdom aſſembled upon an extraordinary Occaſion, tho' after an unuſual manner, is very certain, for Matt. Paris calls it a Council, as I have already noted; and ſince the Doctor has thought fit to ask his Antagoniſt ſeveral Queſtions about theſe Repreſentatives of Counties and Cities, I will ſet them down, and make bold to anſwer them on his behalf, till he is at leiſure to do it himſelf: Firſt, the Doctor asks, if this were a Parliament, how the City-Repreſentatives came to be called Knights, and not by their proper Term of Citizens? Secondly, how the Boroughs came to be forgotten?

To the firſt of theſe Queries I anſwer thus, that there is no neceſſity of conſtruing this word Quatuor here ſet alone without a Subſtantive, by four Knights; for who can ſuppoſe ſo many Knights, or conſiderable Tenants in Capite, to have been in every City of England, eſpecially in the ſmaller ones, ſuch as Litchfield, Hereford, Worceſter, &c. and that in the firſt Year of this King's Reign? Therefore I do believe, that the beſt way to Solve this Difficulty, is, to ſuppoſe the Word, Cives, to be here either left out by the negligence of the Tranſcribers, or elſe to be underſtood according to the Subject (viz. the Cities who ſent thoſe Members) of which theſe Authors are treating; ſince none can imagine, that all the Cities of England could afford four Knights apiece. And as to his ſecond Query, I think it may be anſwer'd thus, that this being no formal Parliament to give Money, or enact Laws, the Regents of the Kingdom might think it not worth while to ſummon the Burgeſſes of all the Boroughs in England to come up to this Aſſembly, only to recognize and ſwear Allegiance to the King; and yet that they might be ſummon'd to Parliaments properly ſo called, when any General Aid was to be given, eſpecially upon all Moveable Goods, in which Grants they were particularly concern'd. But now I deſire I may take my turn, and ask the Doctor a few Queſtions concerning his Aſſertions; as in the firſt place, how he knows or can prove theſe Milites to have been the King's Tenants in Capite, under the Degree of Barons, and only call'd up by the Nobiles, and not choſen by their particular Counties? 2dly. If they were ſo call'd up, how without any Election,they could repreſent any Body, but themſelves? 3dly. As to theſe City-Members, whom he will have likewiſe to be Knights, (and I ſuppoſe Tenants in Capite as well as the former) how he can make it out that there were Tenants in Capite in all the Cities in England, ſince ſeveral of them never held of the King at all, but of Biſhops or Great Lords, as I have already ſhewn? now if the Doctor pleaſes to give us a full Anſwer to theſe few Queries, he may perhaps find himſelf under greater Difficulties, than Mr. A. or I can be in anſwering thoſe he has there put.

However I ſhall make no other Uſe of this Great Council or Convention, but leave it to the Judgment of the indifferent Reader, whether it be at all probable, that if all the leſs Tenants in Capite had been ſummon'd to all Parliaments held in the Reign of the late King, (the laſt of which was but three Years before his Deceaſe) that at this Council held during the new King's Abſence, when Affairs were as yet unſetled, the Guardians of the Kingdom ſhould preſume to exclude almoſt all theſe Tenants in Capite from the Great Council above-mention'd, and ſummon'd no more than four of them, out of each County, to repreſent all the reſt? but if theſe Knights were choſen in the County-Courts by all the Suitors to it, (as it is moſt likely they were) then there is no neceſſity to ſuppoſe them to have been all Tenants in Capite any more than they are now; there being no Clauſe in the Writs of the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, or in any other part of the Reign we are now treating of, that directs they ſhall be Tenants in Capite: And that the contrary was practiſed, I ſhall prove hereafter. In the mean while I ſhall return to the Hiſtory of the Parliaments of this Reign. Preſently after the King's return, viz. in the Year 1274, he ſummon'd his Parliament at Weſtminſter, the * Title of which runs thus: Theſe are the Eſtabliſhments of King Edward, the Son of King Henry, made at Weſtminſter, at the firſt General Parliament after his Coronation, on the morrow of the cloſe of Eaſter, in the third Year of his Reign, by his Council, and by the Aſſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and the whole Commonalty of the Land, thither ſummon'd.

* Vid. Raſtal's Statutes.

In the French, toute la Communalte de la Terre.

Dr. † B. in his Paraphraſe upon this Statute, according to his uſual manner, ſuppoſes, by the Commonalty of the Land, is to be underſtood, the leſs Barons or Tenants in Capite; 'tis true, that the Writs of Summons to this Parliament are loſt, which gives the Doctor this Confidence; but ſince I have already proved, that by the Words le Comun and Comunitas, &c. are to be underſtood the Commons as repreſented by Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament, and that they were alſo ſummon'd to the laſt Great Council; I cannot ſee any reaſon why theſe Words et toute la Communalte de la Terre ſhould not have the ſame ſignification, as the like French and Latin Terms in the laſt King's Reign: But the moſt expreſs Authority that we have to bring againſt the Doctor's Opinion, and to prove that the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes were actually ſummon'd to Parliaments, or Great Councils of the Kingdom, within the firſt eighteen Years of this King's Reign, wherein he ſuppoſes them to have have been excluded, appears from Thomas Walſingham and other Hiſtorians, and thoſe ſufficiently confirm'd by a Writ of Summons to a Parliament at Shrewsbury, in the eleventh Year of this King, (for ſo our Hiſtorians call it) wherein David, Brother to Prince Llewellyn, was ſentenc'd to be drawn, hang'd, and quarter'd, by all the Temporal Eſtates of the Kingdom.

But before I come to the matter it ſelf, I ſhall for the better underſtanding of this remarkable Tranſaction, give you the precedent part of this Hiſtory, which is thus: It appears by a Writ of the 11th of King * Edward I. to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, acquainting him with the Rebellion of Llewellyn Prince of Wales, that He (the ſaid King) de Concilio Prælatorum, Procerum, & Magnatum Regni, necnon totius Communitatis ejuſdem, (which can mean nothing leſs than a Parliament) had reſolved to put an end to this Welſh Rebellion; ſo that it ſeems this War had been concluded on at the Parliament held the Year before, which was here mention'd in this Record; and which that Valiant and Fortunate Prince effectually put an end to, by the total ſubduing of Wales, and the killing of Llewellyn, whoſe Head was cut off, and ſent to London; the Particulars whereof are related by Knighton, as well as other Hiſtorians, at large; and alſo that preſently after David, the Brother of this Llewellyn, (the Cauſe of all theſe Miſchiefs) was in magno Parliamento apud Shrewsbury, condemned, and afterwards drawn, hang'd and quarter'd.

* Rot. Walliæ m. 2. Dorſo. See it at large in the Append.

Walſingham is indeed more ſhort in the Relation of this Parliament, and only ſays, that in the Eleventh of Edward I. habitum eſt Parliamentum apud Salopiam, in which this David was condemned and executed; but Thomas Wikes, who lived at this very time, in his Chronicle, will better inſtruct us, than either Walſingham or Knighton, and his Account of this Parliament is as follows.

† Circa Feſtum Sancti Michaelis Rex convocari fecit apud Salopeſberiam Majores Regni ſui, & Sapientiores tam de Civibus, quam de Magnatibus, & fecit illuc adduci David, qui apud Rothelan fuerat Captivatus, ut ſuper exigentiam Delicti ſui, Corporale ſubiret Judicium, &c. and then relates particularly the manner of his Execution; from which Paſſage we may obſerve, that this Author makes it plain, who were the Communitas Regni mention'd in the former Record of the Eleventh of this King; and who conſtituted this Great Parliament at Shrewsbury, viz. the Majores and Magnates Regni, which laſt, as I have often ſaid, takes in the Knights of Shires, and the beſt of the Citizens in Parliament.

* But all this is confirm'd beyond Diſpute from the ſame Welſh Roll, in which there is enter'd at large a long Writ of this 11th Year of Edward I. whereby all the Earls and Barons of the Kingdom are ſummon'd to meet the King at a Colloquy or Parliament, to be held at Shrewsbury the morrow after Michaelmas-day; and there is on the ſame Roll a ſecond Writ directed to ſeveral Cities and Boroughs, for electing two Citizens, and two Burgeſſes, to this Parliament, with a void ſpace to inſert more Names, had the Clerks thought fit to enter them; and alſo a third Writ is directed to the Sheriffs of every County of England, to cauſe to be choſen two Knights pro Communitate ejuſdem Comitatus; and laſtly, there is a fourth fourth Writ directed to the Juſtices and Others of the King's learned Council, with the ſame Preambles to each of them, being commanded to appear at the ſame time and place: The chief Buſineſs of all theſe Summons was about that Traytor David, and they met accordingly, and agreed upon that Judgment as is already mention'd.

This Record was diſcover'd by Mr. Petyt, the preſent Keeper of the Records in the Tower, not long after he came into that Office; but whether Dr. Brady ever found it or not, I cannot affirm; but thus much is certain, that it did not well become him to be ſo confident in a falſe Opinion, before he had ſearch'd the Records that were in his keeping, and ſeen whether there was not ſufficient Evidence to prove he was miſtaken.

But to deal ingeniouſly, I have heard from ſome of the Doctor's Friends, that he was not convinced by this Authority; becauſe he ſaid, it was not a true Parliament, but only a Colloquy or Treaty with the Earls and Barons, and Knights of Shires, with ſome of the Citizens and Burgeſſes, concerning what was to be done with this David; and beſides it doth not appear by theſe Writs above cited, that the Biſhops or any of the Clergy were ſummon'd to be there; ſo that if this were no Parliament, they will have his Aſſertion to be ſtill true, that the Commons were not ſummon'd to Parliament from the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, to the Eighteenth of this King.

Having given you all I know which can be objected by the Doctor, or his Friends, againſt this Parliament at Shrewsbury, I ſhall now conſider the Force of this Objection; firſt then, I have all the Hiſtorians on my ſide, who call this a Parliament; and certainly it doth as well deſerve this Title, as that at Salisbury in the Twenty fifth Year of this King, which was held excluſo Clero, as you will find in the preceding Hiſtory under that Year; and this was done by the King's ſole Prerogative. But the true Reaſon, why the Biſhops and Abbots were not ſummon'd to this Parliament, was, becauſe the Buſineſs they met about was to paſs Sentence upon this Prince David, which being a matter of Blood, all Eccleſiaſtical Perſons were forbid to meddle therewith, as appears by the Conſtitutions of Clarendon, which you may find in the Reign of Henry the Second.

But to comply with the Doctor's Opinion as far as is poſſible; ſuppoſe we ſhould admit at preſent, that this Aſſembly at Shrewsbury was no true Parliament, but only a Colloquy or Treaty, held by the King with the Earls, Barons, and Commons of the Kingdom, to give their Judgments in a particular Caſe; yet however, it cannot be denied, but that it was a Great Council of the Kingdom: And then can any Man imagine, that the King ſhould think it worth his while to ſummon the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, to ſuch a Council, where the Advice of the Tenants in Capite (if they had been then in Uſe) would have done the Work full out as well, if not better, unleſs they had been wont to have been formerly ſummon'd to Parliaments, from the beginning of his Reign, for the giving of Aids, and conſenting to Statutes; for certainly if they were ſummon'd to Leſs Councils, they had a much greater Right to appear at the Greater: But ſince my firſt writing of theſe Sheets, I find the learned * Doctor Wake to have a ſingular Opinion of his own concerning cerning this Matter, ‘ for he will not allow this Aſſembly at Shrewſ- ‘ bury to be a Great Council of the Nation for the publick Affairs of ‘ State, but only a Lay-Court for the Tryal and Condemnation of ‘ that unfortunate Prince. But I muſt beg this Reverend Author's Pardon if I differ from him in this, and that for the following Reaſons; Firſt, Had it been only a Court erected for this Tryal, there had been no need to ſummon any Commoners at all to it; for Prince David having been made a Baron of England, and having an Eſtate in Lands given him to be held by that Tenure, the Peers alone had been his proper Judges, and the Commons had nothing to do in it. But, Secondly, It appears by the Writ above-mention'd to the Knights and Citizens, &c. that they were not ſummon'd only to try this Prince, but to adviſe the King what was to be done with him; for he being a Perſon of that High Quality, and born in Wales out of his Territories, the King would not proceed againſt him, without the Conſent and Advice of the Lay-Eſtates of his whole Kingdom; and if they met and gave their Judgment in it, this was certainly a great Affair of State, paſſed in a Great Council, and not barely the trying and condemning of a Criminal, in which (as a Court of Judicature, and not as a Parliament, or Great Council) the Commons had nothing to do.

I need not (I think) perſue this Point any further, ſince there was but only One Parliament more, viz. that of Weſtminſter the Third held in the fourteenth of his Reign, between the eleventh and eighteenth Years of this King; the Title of which is very ſhort, and doth not expreſs all the conſtituent Members whereof it conſiſted; but 'tis more than probable, that there was no Alteration made in the Members of it, but that they were the ſame ſort of Men who were ſummon'd to the Parliament or Coloquy laſt mention'd. There were divers other Parliaments held in this King's Reign, in the Titles to which, ſince the Commons are not expreſly named, and from thence Dr. Brady hath taken an occaſion to urge thoſe Titles as ſo many Arguments to prove, that they were not ſummon'd to them, becauſe they are not particularly ſet down; I ſhall leave the conſideration of thoſe Statutes, until I come to the Second Part of this Treatiſe, to anſwer the Doctor's Arguments, whereby he pretends to prove, that the Knights of Shires were not ſummon'd, from the beginning of this King's Reign, until the eighteenth, nor any Citizens and Burgeſſes, till the twenty third Year of his Reign; tho' I think, by what hath been already ſaid on this Head, that Conceit of his is ſufficiently confuted.

In the mean time I ſhall proceed to the third General Head, which was to prove, that the People or Commons of England have from the 23d Year of Edward the Firſt, claim'd this Right of being Repreſented by Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes by Preſcription, i. e. from Time beyond Memory; and that this Claim had been allow'd by the King and his Council, as alſo by all the Biſhops and Peers of this Realm in Parliament.

I ſhall begin with the * firſt Writs of Summons we can find of the Commons to any Parliament of this King's Reign, which is to the Sheriff of Northampton, to ſummon two Knights for that County, and two Citizens, and two Burgeſſes for each City and Borough within the ſame, to appear at a Parliament at Weſtminſter, to be held on the Sunday after the Feaſt of St. Martin in the Winter: This bears date at Canterbury the third day of October; however, this Parliament did not meet on the day appointed by the abovesaid Writs, but was Prorogued until the Sunday before the Feaſt of St. Andrew the Apoſtle, as appears by the King's * Writ of Prorogation of it, dated at Odmer the ſecond day of November.

* Clauſ. 23. Ed. I. m. 2. Dorſ. de Parliamento prorogando.

But that this was not the firſt time that Knights of the Shires were ſummon'd to Parliament, appears by that remarkable Clauſe of, Prout alias in Caſu conſimili fieri conſuevit, inſerted into the Writs for their Expences of the 28th Year of this King, being the firſt that are extant on the Rolls.

Rot. Clauſ. 28. Ed. I. 12. Dorſ.

Now can any one imagine, that theſe words had ever been inſerted in this Writ, if Knights of Shires had been no longer ſummon'd to Parliament, than from the eighteenth Year of this King, from which, till the twenty eighth, there were ſcarce ten Years? and ſuppoſing there had been a Parliament held every Year (as there was not) it could not have created ſuch a Cuſtom as to have given occaſion to have inſerted the Clauſe above-mention'd in all following Writs for Expences of Knights of Shires, and alſo for the Citizens and Burgeſſes.

And tho' indeed the Writs for their Expences are loſt, till thoſe of the twenty eighth of this King, but juſt now mention'd, yet we find by the like Summons on the Cloſe-Rolls, and the * Writs to the Sheriffs, perſuant to them of the 29th, and 33d, and 34th of this King, for levying their Expences for coming to, ſtaying, and returning from Parliaments, the ſame Clauſe, prout in Caſu conſimili, &c. was ſtill inſerted, which had been ridiculous, had the Cuſtom of ſummoning the Repreſentatives of the Commons to Parliament, been of ſo late a date as Doctor Brady is pleaſed to conceit.

* Vid. Rot. Clauſ. 28. Ed. I. m. 12. Dorſ. 29. Ed. I. m. 17. Dorſ. 33. Ed I. m. 15. Dorſ. 34. Ed I. m. 11. Dorſ. 35. Ed. I. m. 14. Dorſ.

But that this Cuſtom could not take its riſe in this King's, or his Father's Time only, but from Time beyond Memory, I ſhall make out from certain other Writs entred in the old Regiſter: And the firſt is, for the Tenants of Antient Demeſne, I ſhall give it you in the Latin Original, as far as is neceſſary for our purpoſe, Rex Vice-Comiti L. Salutem monſtraverunt Nobis homines & Tenentes de manerio de F. quod eſt de antiquo Dominico Coronæ Anglicæ, ut dicitur, quod licet ipſi & eorum Anteceſſores Tenentes de eodem manerio de F. à Tempore quo non extat memoria ſemper hactenus quieti eſſe conſueverunt, de expenſis Militum ad Parliamenta noſtra & Progenitorum noſtrorum Regum Angliæ pro Communitate dicti Comitatus venientium, &c. from which we may obſerve, that theſe Tenants claim by this Writ to be acquitted from the Wages paid to Knights of the Shires, that came to Parliaments in the time of this King and his Progenitors, which muſt certainly mean as high as Richard the Firſt at leaſt, ſince it is ordain'd by the Statute of Quo Warranto made in the eighteenth of King Edward the Firſt, That all thoſe who claim'd any Franchiſe or Liberty before the time of King Richard the Firſt, ſhall quietly enjoy the poſſeſſion of it: And it is to be noted, that the beginning of this King's Reign was counted the utmoſt time, à quo non extat memoria, as it hath been accounted ever ſince for all real Actions. But to give you the reſt of this Writ, it goes on in Engliſh thus; That whereas the Sheriff diſtrains the ſaid Tenants to contribute to the Expences of the Knights that came to the laſt Parliament, to their great Damage, otherwiſe than had been accuſtom'd in all times paſt, omnibus temporibus retroactis fieri conſuevit, therefore the King commands him that he deſiſt from his ſaid Diſtreſs, and do not compel the ſaid Tenants to contribute otherwiſe, quam omnibus temporibus retroactis, &c. Now, tho' this Writ be entred without any King's Name, or Date, yet it appears at the bottom, that it was iſſued out by G. L' Eſcrope then Chancellor, and William de Herlſton, Clerk of the Chancery; and this muſt have been before the fifteenth of Edward the Second, becauſe it appears by the cloſe * Rolls of that Year, that in December the Great Seal was deliver'd to William d' Ayremyn, under the Seals of William de Clyffe, and the ſaid William de Herlſton, Clerks of Chancery, who are often mention'd in our † Records, to have been Keepers of it pro tempore, till the Second Year of Edward the Third, when the ſaid William de Herlſton had the ſole Cuſtody thereof committed to him. There are other * Writs of this kind upon the Cloſe Rolls, as particularly one directed to Sir John de Cobham, and four other Knights therein named, reciting, 'That whereas 'Simon, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, claims as well for himſelf as his 'Predeceſſors, and their Tenants hitherto, à tempore quo non extat 'memoria, certain Lands held in Gavel-kind in the County of Kent, 'which ought to be free from the Expences of Knights coming to 'all Parliaments of that King, as well as thoſe of his Progenitors; 'and then it concludes with a ſuperſedeas to the ſaid Sheriff, not 'to moleſt the ſaid Tenants, until ſuch time as the King be further 'inform'd, and that He, by the Advice of his Council, hath ordain'd, 'what is to be done in the Premiſes. From both theſe Writs we may draw theſe Concluſions; Firſt, That there was at the time of the granting theſe Writs a Claim by Preſcription, time out of Mind, allowed for all Tenants in Antient Demeſne, as alſo for thoſe who held of the Archbiſhop in Gavel-kind, to be exempted from contributing to the Wages of Knights of the Shire, or elſe theſe Petitions, and the Writs upon them had been to no purpoſe; for you muſt note, that all Tenants in Antient Demeſne, and in Gavel-kind, were made ſo before the Conqueſt, and therefore might well plead a Preſcription; and were it not that I ſhould be tedious, I could cite ſeveral other Writs of this kind, as alſo Pleas of certain Towns to this purpoſe, and that not long after the time the Doctor ſuppoſes the Commons were again ſummon'd to Parliament. And as I have now ſhewn, that the Claim of ſending Knights of Shires to Parliament was by Preſcription, ſo I ſhall next proceed to do the ſame for the Antient Cities and Boroughs of the Kingdom, and alſo prove, that they claim'd to ſend Citizens and Burgeſſes to Parliament by the like Right of Preſcription. I have a little before cited the Writs of Expences of the Knights of Shires, that came to Parliament in the 35th Year of this King; and upon the ſame Roll, there is alſo enter'd a * Writ to the Bailiffs of the Town of St. Alban's, commanding them to levy of the Community of the ſame Town for Simon Trewisks and Adam Etteſtile, their reaſonable Expences for coming to the Parliament at Carliſle, to treat with the King, ſuper diverſis negotiis Nos & ſtatum Regni noſtri tangentibus, i. e. concerning divers Affairs touching Us and the State of our Kingdom, for their coming, ſtaying, and returning home, prout in caſu conſimili fieri conſuevit. This bears date at Lanercoſt, the twentieth Day of Jan. Then below there is entred, Conſimiles Literas habent Cives & Burgenſes ſubſcripti pro expenſis ſuis in Civitatibus, Burgis & Villis ſubſcriptis, i. e. the like Letters or Writs have the Citizens and Burgeſſes under-written, for their Expences in the Cities, Towns, and Boroughs that there follow, ſuch as London, &c. And on the * Cloſe-Roll of the fifth of Edward the Second, there is a like Writ to the Bailiffs of the ſame Town, for levying the Expences for Ralph Pycot and Peter Pycot, who had lately come to the King to his Parliament at London, and concludes with the like Clauſe, Prout in Caſu conſimili fieri conſuevit.

But becauſe this Writ to the Bailiffs was not obſerved, the King iſſued out a * Writ to the Sheriff of Hartford-ſhire, reciting the aforeſaid Writ to the Bailiffs of St. Alban's, and then proceeds, ‘ That ‘ whereas the Bailiffs of the Abbey of St. Alban's had made a Return, ‘ that they had neither levied nor paid any Money to the ſaid R.P. ‘ and P. P. that the ſaid Town was never accuſtom'd to pay Ex‘pences to the Knights of Shires, but is Liber Burgus (a Free Bo‘rough) and that they have been preſent in all Parliaments, which ‘ were ſummon'd in times paſt by Writs of the King Himſelf and ‘ his Progenitors, as other Burgeſſes of the Kingdom have been hither‘to accuſtom'd, the King thereupon appointed the ſaid R. P. and P. P. ‘ to appear before Him in Chancery on the Octaves of St. Hillary, to ‘ inform Him more fully concerning the Premiſes, and to receive ‘ what the Court ſhould order in that Caſe; therefore He again ‘ commands the ſaid Sheriff to give notice to the Abbot and Bai‘liffs of St. Alban's, that they ſhould appear before the King in Chan‘cery, in Quindena Paſchæ next coming, to ſhew Cauſe, why the ‘ ſaid R. P. and P. P. ſhould not receive their ſaid Expences as ‘ Burgeſſes for the ſaid Town, according to the King's Command. This bears Date at York the 20th of January, A. R. 5.

There is likewiſe a † ſecond Writ on the ſame Roll, and of the ſame Year of this King, and ſeems to have been to another Parliament before this, and is directed to the ſaid Bailiffs of St. Alban's, for the paying Peter le Plomers, and Peter Picot, Burgeſſes of Parliament their Wages, prout aliàs in Caſu conſimili fieri conſuevit. This is dated at Weſtminſter the 18th Day of December.

From which Writs for the Expences of theſe Burgeſſes we may obſerve, Firſt, That the Burgeſſes of St. Alban's had their Expences for coming to Parliament, in all times aforegoing; and that this Phraſe imports no ſmall ſpace of Time, appears by the ſecond Writ, whereby they claim'd to come to Parliament in the Time of the King Himſelf, and his Progenitors, which may reach as high as the time of King John, Great Grand-father to Edward the Second; and laſtly, They claim'd this Privilege as being a Free-Borough, and not being Taxed with the County of Hartford. What was further done in this Diſpute between the Burgeſſes of this Town, and the Abbot and his Bailifs, we do not find, till the Eighth Year of this King, when they, being then hinder'd from having any Return made of their Burgeſſes elected to Parliament, ſollicited the King and his Council againſt the ſaid Bayliffs, as appears by their * Petition in French, which is found looſe among a Bundle of other Writs, and was from thence enter'd upon the Parliament † Roll of this Year in Latin, together with the Anſwer thereupon by the King and his Council in Parliament, I ſhall tranſlate the Subſtance of this Petition into Engliſh, and leave the Reader to conſult the Latin Original in Mr. * Petyt's Rights of the Commons, and Dr. † B's Anſwer to it. 'the King in Chief, and they as other Burgeſſes of the Kingdom,

'to be ſummon'd by two of their Fellow-Burgeſſes, as they were uſed
'to do in all paſt times, for all Services which were to be perform'd to

'Burgeſſes of the ſaid Town, have perform'd, as is before declar'd,
'as well in the time of Edward late King of England, Father of the 'King and his Progenitors, as in the time of the King that now is,
'always before this preſent Parliament: The Names of which Burgeſſes
'for the ſaid Town, ſo coming to the King's Parliaments, were 'always enroll'd in the Rolls of the Chancery. Nevertheleſs the 'King's Sheriff of the County of Hertford, by the Favour and Procurement

It was anſwer'd by the * Council: Let the Rolls of Chancery be ſearched, &c. whether in the time of the King's Progenitors, the Burgeſſes aforeſaid uſed to come or not, and then let them have Juſtice done in this matter, thoſe being call'd, who ought to be call'd if there be occaſion; the Latin Words are, vocatis evocandis ſi neceſſe fuerit.

I will give you now † Doctor B's Anſwer to this Authority, wherein he ſlyly paſſes by (yet at the ſame time tacitly allows) the Claim by Preſcription of theſe Burgeſſes, that they had come to Parliament in the time of King Edward, Father of the King and his Progenitors, as in the time of the King that now is; but however he does whatever he can to evade the force of this Authority; and, to amuſe his Reader, finds fault with Mr. Petyt, that he hath conceal'd part of this Record, that the Burgeſſes of St. Albans, and of other Boroughs did, or ought to come to Parliament by reaſon of their Tenures in Capite, for that it was in lieu of all other Services perform'd to the King in reſpect of that Tenure; and then in the next Paragraph he proceeds thus, 'for 'tis evident, the Burgeſſes of St. Albans claim'd not, nor preſcribed, to come to Parliaments meerly as from a 'Borough, but as from a Town that held in Chief of the King; and 'this Service was incident to their Tenure, and was ſuch as the King's Pro-

† B. A. P. p. 38

‘ Progenitors had accepted in lieu of all Services due by reaſon thereof: The Doctor has thought fit to tax Mr. P. for concealing that Clauſe in this Record, concerning the Burgeſſes of St. Albans holding in Capite, as if it were done on purpoſe, which I have no reaſon to believe, for I do not ſee what Advantage he could gain by it to the Cauſe he aſſerts; but this I am ſure of, that the Doctor hath here wreſted the Senſe of this Record, in making not only St. Albans, but all other Boroughs of the Kingdom, to have no Right to come to Parliament, otherwiſe than by reaſon of their Tenures in Capite, which is more than the Record it ſelf ſays; for tho' the Burgeſſes ſet forth in their Petition, that they hold the ſaid Town in Capite, and that they, as other Burgeſſes of the Kingdom, ought to come to the King's Parliaments, yet they do not ſay, that thoſe other Burgeſſes came thither as Tenants in Capite; and if they had, their Averment would not have been true; and the Reader may if he pleaſes compare the Original Latin Record, with the Doctor's own Engliſh Tranſlation, which I have here given, and conſider whether they agree with the Gloſs, that He hath here put upon it; and therefore what he avers from thence is likewiſe falſe, that the Burgeſſes of St. Albans claim'd not to come to Parliaments meerly as a Borough, but as a Town that held in Chief from the King, whereas there are divers Cities and Boroughs in England, which held of Biſhops and other Great Lords, and not of the King at all, as I ſhall ſhew you more at large anon. But before I do that, I cannot but take notice, that the Doctor (I ſuppoſe before he was aware) has in the laſt three Lines of this Paragraph granted the Plea of thoſe Burgeſſes of St. Albans, that this Service (viz. of coming to Parliament) being incident to their Tenure, was ſuch as the King's Progenitors had accepted of in lieu of all Services due by reaſon thereof. Now if the King and his Progenitors had thus accepted of this Service, the conſequence muſt be, that they ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament, not only in the time of this King, but of his Father and his Progenitors, which muſt reach as high as King John's or Henry the Second's Reign: But this Conceſſion cannot agree with the Doctor's poſitively aſſerting, that the Commons never had any Repreſentatives in Parliament till the Forty ninth of Henry the Third; and that as for the Cities and Boroughs, they never ſent any Repreſentatives thither, till the Twenty third of Edward the Firſt, when their Firſt Writs for their being ſummon'd to Parliament are found upon the Roll, as he ſets forth in this very Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, and he is more poſitive in his Treatiſe of Cities and Boroughs, Page 24, 25. wherein he expreſly aſſerts, that Citizens and Burgeſſes were firſt ſummon'd to the Parliament abovemention'd, and alſo undertakes to give his Reaſons for this Alteration.

But to return to the Subject from whence we have digreſſed; I ſhall now ſhew the Doctor's Miſtake, and prove, that there are many Cities and Boroughs of the Kingdom, which ſend Citizens and Burgeſſes to Parliament by Preſcription, which yet did not hold of the King in Capite; and ſhall give you divers Inſtances which I received from a * Learned Friend late deceaſed, who took them out of the Rolls in the Tower; tho' when he ſent them me, either thro' haſt or inadvertency, he forgot to ſet down the number to moſt of ſuch Boroughs that never held in Capite, and yet always ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament by Preſcription: As Firſt, the Borough and Caſtle of Arundel, which was held of the Earl, and not of the King, being granted by Henry the Firſt to Hugh Montgomery, Earl of Arundel. Secondly, The City of Bath holds of the Biſhop of that City. Thirdly, The City of Wells, which always held of the Biſhop, and never of the King, and is therefore called Villa Epiſcopi in all publick Writings belonging to that Church, and was made a Free-Borough in the third Year of King John. Fourthly, Beverly was made ſo by Thurſtan, Archbiſhop of York, which was confirm'd by King Henry the Third. Fifthly, Bodmin, which always held of the Priors of Bodmin in Cornwal. Sixthly, Bridgwater, for King John granted to William Brewer, quod Brugwater ſit liber Burgus. Seventhly, Coventry, which was always held of the Earls of Cheſter. Eighthly, Biſhops Lynne, for King John granted to John, Biſhop of Norwich, Quod Burgus de Lenna ſit Liber Burgus in perpetuum. All which we find by the Writs we have left us, ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament as early as any that held in Capite: Theſe, I think, may be ſufficient to make good my Point; but I doubt not, if I had leiſure enough for it, but I could ſhew you three times as many, eſpecially in Cornwal, where the Boroughs did almoſt all hold of the Earls of Cornwal, and not of the King: ſo likewiſe in Hereford-ſhire and Worceſter-ſhire, where are many Boroughs at this Day, that hold of theſe Biſhops of Hereford and Worceſter, and not of the King.

But it is time to return to the Doctor, and give you the reſt of his Learned Obſervations upon this Petition, which are theſe: ‘And further, ſays he, the Anſwer to this Petition is remarkable, for if it did appear by the Chancery-Rolls, that the Burgeſſes of St. Alban's were wont to come to Parliaments in the times of the King's Progenitors, then ſuch as have been call'd, ſhould be call'd, when there was neceſſity for it. Hence 'tis clear, adds he, that the King and his Council were equally Judges when it was neceſſary to call them, and for them to come, as they were of their Right and Pretences to come.

It hath been objected (ſays the Doctor) by one that ſeldom knows or underſtands what he ſays, that evocatis evocandis, cannot be underſtood of calling Burgeſſes to Parliament, but thoſe words are ſo to be interpreted, that if after the Rolls were ſearched, farther Tryal or hearing of the Parties were neceſſary, then they ſhould be call'd, and their Reaſons heard.

The Author of Jani Anglor. ab Antiq.

And to this he anſwers, that every Plea ought to be tryable, either by the County, if Matter of Fact; or by the Juſtices, if Matter of Law; or by the Record it ſelf, if it conſiſt in Matter of Record; for the Law doth give ſo much Honour and Credit to Records, that they ſhall be tryed only by themſelves. This Tryal therefore depending wholly upon Record, the words cannot be underſtood of calling Parties in order to any further Tryal.

Ibid. Coke's Reports, Part 9. the Caſe of the Abbot of Strata Marcella. p. 30, 31.

Yet notwithſtanding the Doctor's great Confidence, I think his Antagoniſt, whom he treats with ſo much Scorn and Contempt is in the Right; and that the words Evocatis Evocandis, &c. are here to be underſtood of calling the Parties or Witneſſes, if there were occaſion, and I am the more too inclin'd to believe it for theſe Reaſons: Firſt, From the Judgment which was given in the fifth Year of this King, when this Matter began firſt to be in diſpute between the Burgeſſes and Bailiffs of St. Alban's, as appears by the Writ before cited, which I need not repeat; only you may remember, that the Privilege which this Town then claim'd of ſending two Burgeſſes to Parliament, was acknowledg'd but three Years before, by having a Writ for the allowance of their Wages; ſo that this being a Matter of Record, it is a very proper Anſwer for the King's Council, to order the Rolls of Chancery to be ſearched; and if thoſe were not ſufficient, then Evocatis Evocandis ſi neceſſe fuerit, i.e. Let ſuch Witneſſes be ſummon'd as ought to be ſummon'd to prove it, if there be any neceſſity for it: So that it ſeems the Chancellor was to judge of this, for in the Record now before us, there is not one word concerning the bringing it before the King's Council, or of their taking upon them to do Juſtice in it, but only in general, let Juſtice be done, which would have been a very improper way of ſpeaking, had this Juſtice been to be done immediately before themſelves; and therefore it is a great Miſtake in the Doctor to render thoſe words Evocatis Evocandis ſi neceſſe fuerit, ſuch as have been call'd, ſhould be call'd, or ſummon'd when there was neceſſity for it.

Nor is the forced Inference he makes from it leſs abſurd; for, ſays he, Hence it is clear, the King and his Council were equally Judges, when it was neceſſary to call them, and for them to come, as they were of their Right and Pretences to come, which is directly contrary to the purport of the ſaid Burgeſſes Petition, who therein ſet forth, that they ought to come to the King's Parliaments when they ſhould be ſummon'd by two of their Burgeſſes, as they were wont to do in all times paſt for all Services, &c. which is a Claim not of Favour, but of Right, and which Claim is here admitted by the King and his Council to be good, if they could make it out; and therefore the Anſwer of the Council was, Let the Rolls be ſearch'd, and then let Juſtice be done. But this would have been a very impertinent Anſwer, if when the Rolls had been ſearch'd, the King and his Council ſhould have been equally Judges, not only when it was neceſſary to call or ſummon them, as well as other Burgeſſes to Parliament, but alſo of their Right to come at all; which would indeed have quite taken away all that theſe Burgeſſes then claim'd and petition'd for, and have wholly reſolv'd it into the Arbitrary Will and Pleaſure of the King and Council: And that this is ſo, I ſhall appeal to the very words the Doctor hath cited from Cook's Reports, that every Plea ‘is tryable either by the County, if Matter of Fact; or by the Juſtices, if Matter of Law; or by the Record it ſelf, if it conſiſt in ‘Matter of Record; for the Law doth give ſo much Honour and ‘Credit to Records, that they ſhall be try'd only by themſelves; the meaning of which is, the Judges are obliged to give Judgment according to the Record, and not according to their own Diſcretions; ſo that if we ſuppoſe the King's Council in Parliament to have had the Rolls brought before them, and to have therein found that the Town of St. Alban's, had ſent Members to Parliament time beyond Memory, I ſee no reaſon why the King's Council ſhould not have been as much obliged to allow of this Record, as the Judges in Weſtminſter-Hall? Nor does the King's Council refer the Deciſion to the Rolls alone, but alſo to the Teſtimony of Witneſſes, as appears by what follows, Evocatis Evocandis ſi neceſſe fuerit; which I take to be the true Grammatical ſenſe of theſe words, and can by no means be underſtood in that (as the Doctor would have them) of their being ſummon'd or call'd to Parliament, only when there was any need of it. Since the words Evocatis Evocandis, &c. can no way admit of that Conſtruction; for we find in Pliny the Younger, that Evocare teſtes is to ſummon Witneſſes; and in the Forms of the Civil and Common Law-Courts, Evocatis Evocandis always ſignifies the citing of the Parties concern'd, or ſuch Witneſſes as are neceſſary in a Cauſe depending, and ſo far it is intelligible; but I ſhould be very glad if any of the Doctor's Friends, to whom he left his Notes and Collections, could give us any Precedents, that Evocare ad Parliamentum, is ever put for ſummoning Members to Parliament; but enough, if not too much of ſuch trifling as this.

Now, to put this Matter beyond all diſpute, tho' we do not find it expreſſed in other Parliamentary Records, that upon this Plea of the Burgeſſes of St. Alban's, Judgment was given for them, yet that it was more than probable, appears by another of this King's* Writs, upon the Cloſe-Roll of this Year, directed to the Sheriff of Stafford-ſhire, for the levying of the Expences for the Knights of that Shire, who came to the Parliament, at Weſtminſter, on the Octaves of St. Hilary laſt paſt, being 19 l. 10 s. at four Shillings per Diem, dated at Weſtminſter the ninth Day of March; and then follows thus on the ſame Roll, Conſimiles litteras habent Cives & Burgenſes ſubſcripti; then follow the Names of ſeveral Cities and Boroughs, who were to receive for each of them four Pounds ſixteen Shillings, at two Shillings per Day for the time they had ſerved: And, among the reſt, the like Sum was to be paid to Thomas le Taylor, and William, Son to John the Mareſchal, who had come as Burgeſſes from the ſaid Town to the late Parliament; ſo that from their appearing there, and having their Wages allow'd in the Parliament, immediately following the former, in which they petition'd the King and Council, it evidently proves, that their Plea had been allow'd, and Judgment given in their favour.

* Rot. Clauſ. 8 Ed 2. M. 13. Dorſ.

And this is ſtill further confirm'd by the Letters-Patents of the Firſt of Edward the Third, reciting and confirming a certain Indenture in French made between the Abbot of St. Alban's, and the Burgeſſes of the ſame Town, bearing Date the Monday after the Feaſt of St. Gregory the ſame Year; wherein there is contain'd a final Agreement of all Quarrels and Diſſentions between the ſaid Abbot and Burgeſſes; and after the recital of the Bounds of the ſaid Abby, and of its particular Privileges, the Abbot does there likewiſe acknowledge, that the ſaid Burgeſſes of St. Alban's, whoſe Names are there particularly ſet down, Puiſſent de Eux-meſmes eſlire deux Burgeis d'aler à cheſcun Parlement, that is, they were impower'd to chuſe from among themſelves two Burgeſſes to go to every Parliament; and that this was farther continued in the ſecond Year of Edward the Third, appears by a like Record on the ſame Roll, being a Writ for the Expences of Roger Rayſon and John Sterthop, Burgeſſes for the ſaid Town in the laſt Parliament or Treaty held at York the Sunday after St. James's-Tide laſt paſt. This Writ bears

Rot. Clauſ 2. Ed. 3. M 16. Dorſ. Pro Expenſ. Burgenſium

Date at York the ſixth of Auguſt, by the King and Council. The like Writs have the Bailiffs of the Towns here ſubſcribed, viz. &c. So likewiſe in the fourth Year of this King there is a Writ (found among a looſe Bundle of Writs of Summons preſerved in the Tower) directed to the Sheriffs of Eſſex and Hartford-ſhire, ſetting forth a Writ of Summons to a Parliament at Weſtminſter, on the Monday after the Feaſt of St. Catherine next coming; and that two Knights for each County, and two Burgeſſes for each Borough, ſhould be choſen for the ſame. Dated at Leiceſter the twenty third of October, Anno Regni Quarto, per ipſum Regem & Conſilium. Then follow, in the ſame Record, the Names of the two Burgeſſes of St. Alban's, who were there return'd; and alſo the Names of the two Manucaptors for their appearance in Parliament.

But if there had been none of theſe laſt Proofs, the Matter of Fact already cited, had been ſufficient, ſince this Plea of the Burgeſſes of St. Alban's having been allow'd by the King and his Council, was enough to prove that it was true, that the antient Boroughs had a Right of ſending Members to Parliament by Preſcription, viz. Time beyond Memory; or elſe certainly the King's Council would have been ſo far from allowing it, that they would rather have deny'd the ground of the Claim theſe Burgeſſes then made; for had their being ſummon'd to Parliament been of no longer Date than the twenty third Year of the laſt King's Reign, it would not from that time to the eighth of Edward the Second, have been full twenty Years, which being within the Memory of all the Councellors there preſent, they would certainly have rejected this Plea as ridiculous, becauſe they themſelves could very well remember, when Citizens and Burgeſſes had been firſt ſummon'd to Parliament, except only once in the forty ninth of Henry the Third, which yet was not fifty Years before that very time, when this Diſpute happened between the Burgeſſes and Bailiffs of St. Alban's, and ſo might alſo have been within the Memory of divers of the Members of that Council, who might very well be about threeſcore Years of Age, and have remember'd when no Cities or Boroughs ſent Members to Parliament at all.

I have been the more particular in the Account of this Tranſaction, becauſe not only this antient Borough of St. Alban's, but every other City and Borough in England, that claim'd to ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament by Preſcription, might have made the like Plea, and have obtain'd the like Judgment in caſe their Right had been queſtion'd.

I ſhall in the next place proceed to ſhew you, that not only the King and Council, but the Earls and Barons themſelves, have declar'd their Judgment that the Commons in Parliament were of the like ſtanding and Antiquity with themſelves; and this I ſhall prove from two remarkable Inſtances; the firſt is, that memorable * Record of Parliament in the Fortieth of Edward the Third, when 'the Pope demanded of Him the Arrears of the Tribute, or Penſion formerly granted by King John to his Predeceſſors; whereupon after full Deliberation in Parliament, the Prelates, Lords, 'and Commons, reſolved with one accord, That neither the King 'nor any Other could put the Realm (or People thereof) into ſuch Sub-'jection

* Rot. Par. 40. Ed. 3. n. 7.

'jection, ſanz Aſſent de Eux, i. e. without their Aſſent, viz. as well of the Commons, as of the Lords; And further that if He had ſo done, it was done ſanz lour Aſſent, and contrary to that King's Coronation-Oath, &c. Now what can be more plain, than that above three hundred Years ago, there was not the leaſt Diſpute, whether the Commons of England, as well as the Lords, ought to have been preſent in the Common Councils of the Kingdom in King John's Reign, but an owning that they ought to have aſſented to that King's Reſignation, to render it legal and valid, as well as the Prelates, Earls and Barons.

To this Authority, I ſhall give you the † Doctor's Anſwer in his own Words, viz. All that the Reſolution of this Parliament proves in this Caſe, is, that King John could not ſubject Himſelf, his Realm, or People, without the Aſſent of a Parliament, but proves not, who they were, that in ſuch Caſes, or at that time, gave or deny'd their Aſſent, or how they did it, or whether One hundred fifty three Years before this Reſolution, the Commons were repreſented by Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, as they were when this Reſolution was given; and the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, gave their Aſſent firſt, that ſuch a Subjection could not be made without their Aſſent; and then the Commons were ask'd, what their Thoughts were, and they anſwered in the ſame manner, and in the ſame Words as the Barons had done, and when they anſwer altogether, they do it in the ſame Form of Speech conceiv'd, firſt by the Barons, without any conſideration whether the Commons were the ſame Body of Men, at the time of executing the Charter of King John's Subjection, &c. as at that preſent or not.

† B. A. P. p.

This Objection of the Doctor's not being at all ſatisfactory, I think there may be this Reply made to it; if there is no credit to be given to this Reſolution of both Houſes of Parliament, laid down in ſo ſolemn a manner, I know not how they cou'd be believed in any thing elſe they declared, if once the Commons are ſuppoſed to ſpeak like Parrots after the Lords, without conſidering what they ſaid. And tho' the firſt Propoſal of this matter was by the King to the Lords, yet the Pope then threatning to Excommunicate Him, and put the whole Realm under an Interdict, it was certainly the Intereſt as well of the Commons as the Lords to avoid the Blow by a wary and true Anſwer to the Pope's Demands; for had their Anſwer been ſo idle and frivolous, as the Doctor would make it, it had been Advantage enough for his Sanctity to have return'd in anſwer to this Letter, (had what the Doctor alledges been true) that the upſtart Houſe of Commons had nothing to do to meddle or treat of any ſuch matter, ſince they were none of the Parties to the Agreement, nor any Members of the Common Council of the Kingdom at that time when King John reſign'd his Crown, and made Himſelf and Kingdom tributary to his Holineſs's Predeceſſor: Nor was the ſpace of an hundred fifty three Years (from the time of King John to the Fortieth of Edward the Third) ſo far beyond the Memory of Man, that ſo remarkable a Tranſaction could not be well known to the Pope, as well as to the Houſe of Commons then in being, ſince the calling them to Parliament fell out but in the time of their Grandfathers at furtheſt, and therefore almoſt to be forgot by all then living.

I ſhall now proceed to my laſt Authority, (tho' of ſomewhat a later Date, which is from the ſame * Author from whom I have borrow'd the former, and it is the Senſe of the Houſe of Commons, in the Second Year of Henry the Fifth, in their Petition preſented to Him in theſe Words, Our Soveraign Lord the King, your humble and trewe Lieges, that ben come for the Comens of your Lond, byſechin unto your riht Wiſeneſſe, that ſoo as hit hath ever be thair Libertie and Freedom, that there ſhould noo Statute, noo Law be made, of leſs then they yaf thereto their Aſſent, conſidering that the Comens of your Lond, the which that is, and ever hath be a Member of your Parliament, been as well Aſſentirs as Petitioners, that fro this time forward by Compleint of the Commune of eny Miſchief, asking remedy by mouth of their Speaker for the Comens, outherelſe by Petition written, that there never be noo Law made thereupon, and ingroſſed as Statute and Law, neither by Additions, neither by Diminutions, by no manner of Terme ne Termes, the which ſhould change the Sentence, and the Intent asked by the Speaker's mouth, or the Petitions by foreſaid yeven up in wryteing by the foreſaid, without Aſſent of the foreſaid Comens, &c. the reſt, as not ſo much to the purpoſe, I omit: Now that this Petition was allow'd by the King and Lords, appears by the Anſwer to it in theſe Words: The King of his Grace eſpecially granteth, that from henceforth, nothing be enacted to the Petitions of his Commune that be contrary of their asking, whereby they ſhould be bound without their Aſſent, ſaving always to our Liege Lord his † Real Prerogatyf to grant, and deny, what Him luſt of their Petitions, and Askings aforeſaid.

Rot. Parl. 2 H. 5. Part 2. n. 22.

† i. e. Royal.

I ſhall now give you Dr. B's Anſwer to this Objection, and that too in his own Words, viz. 'That * the Deſign of this Petition 'was not to ſet forth the Antiquity of the Exiſtence of the Commons, but their Right, that nothing might be enacted without their 'Aſſent, contrary to their intent and liking; and to ſhew that it 'was never done, ſince they were (as they ſay) a Member of Parliament, therefore 'tis needleſs to prove that which no Body denies, that the Aſſent of the Commons was then, and is now required 'to the making of all Statutes and Laws; for pray give me leave 'to ask you, What, were the Commons of England, as now repre'ſented by Knights, and Citizens, and Burgeſſes, ever an eſſential, 'conſtituent part of the Parliament from Eternity, before Man was 'created? Or have they been ſo ever ſince Adam? Or ever ſince England was peopled; Or ever ſince the Britains, Romans, and Saxons 'inhabited this Iſland? Certainly there was a time when they began 'to be ſo repreſented, and that is the Queſtion in diſpute.

* B.A.P. p. 86.

This Anſwer of the Doctor's is indeed rather a Cavil than a fair and ingenuous Reply; for who can imagine, that the Commons ever pretended to come to Parliament before Parliaments were in being? but only ever ſince they were inſtituted? and to ſhew you the Abſurdity of the Doctor's Queries, I ſhall alter the Caſe, and ſuppoſe, that when the Biſhops in the Year 1641, were to be excluded the Houſe of Lords by a Bill brought up by the Commons for that purpoſe, they had put in a Petition to the two Houſes of Parliament, ſetting forth their antient Right to be Members of that Aſſembly, in theſe or the like Words, That they had been ever or always ſummon'd to Parliaments; would it have been a fair Anſwer of the Houſe of Lords or Commons, to have aſk'd them, whether they were as antient as Adam, or ever ſince the Iſland had been inhabited? ſince every one knows, that general Words are always to be underſtood, not literally, but according to the Intent and Meaning of thoſe that ſpeak them, and that is, generally.

But I ſhall now ſay ſomewhat to that part of the Doctor's Anſwer, which has ſome more weight, viz. that the King and Lords did not allow their whole Petition, for their Intent and Meaning was no more, than that nothing had been enacted without their Conſents, ever ſince they had been ſummon'd to Parliament; and therefore the King had no reaſon to give an Anſwer to any more of it, without taking notice of the reſt. To which it may be reply'd, that this is a very forced Interpretation, becauſe the Commons Aſſertion is poſitive, who affirm, that they had ever been a Member of Parliament; and if the King and Lords had not been ſatisfied with the truth of this, it had been very proper for them to have told the ſaid Commons, that they were very preſumptuous in going about to impoſe upon the King, ſeeing that it was not an Hundred and fifty Years, ſince they were firſt ſummon'd to appear there.

But indeed the King and Lords were very well ſatisfied, that this was not the firſt time they had put in this Claim; for it appears upon the Parliament * Rolls, that they had made a like Declaration in the time of his Grandfather King Edward the Third, wherein they ſaid peremptorily, they would not be obliged to any Statutes or Ordinances made without their Conſents. Of the like nature to which, I could alſo give you another Inſtance in the Reign of Richard the Second, were not what I have already ſaid, ſufficient upon this Subject.

* Rot. Parl. 18 Ed. 3. m. 6.

And now I come to the fourth and laſt General Head, to give you the Teſtimony of divers learned Antiquaries, who are all of this Opinion, and aſſert this to be the Antient Rights of the Commons of England by Preſcription, both before and ſince the pretended Conqueſt.

I begin with the Authority of the antient Treatiſe, call'd, Modus tenendi Parliamentum; and tho' I am ſatisfied by the Arguments brought by Mr. Selden in his Titles of Honour, that it is not of that Antiquity as Sir Edward Cook and others have ſuppoſed it to be, yet it is certainly as antient as the Reign of Edward the Third, as is viſible by the hand of that Copy, ſtill preſerved in the Cottonian Library; and alſo tho' I grant the Author of it was miſtaken, in ſuppoſing that the manner of holding Parliaments in his own time, was as antient as King Ethelred Father to Edward the Confeſſor, and conſequently, that the ſummoning the Commons to Parliament by Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, according to the Form there ſet down, was of the ſame Antiquity; yet that it was then very antient, appears by his repreſenting the Commons to be ſummon'd to Parliaments, Time beyond Memory; which certainly he would never have done, had their firſt ſummoning been then known to be no Antienter than the Forty ninth of Henry III. at the furtheſt, from which time down to the middle of the Reign of Edward III. (when we may ſuppoſe this Author to have wrote) there was not Ninety Years. And if it was not within the Memory of any Man then living, ving, yet was it, to be ſure, within that of their Fathers, who ('tis not likely) would omit telling their Children of ſo remarkable an Alteration in the Government, as the excluſion of all the leſs Tenants in Capite, and the ſummoning of Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, to future Parliaments in their ſteads: But if this Alteration was made about the middle of Edward the Firſt's Reign, (as Dr. Brady ſuppoſes) it will be about twenty Years later than the time Sir Henry Spelman and Mr. Pryn allow it.

I ſhall next proceed to that Learned Antiquary Mr. Lambard, who was certainly the beſt vers'd of any one in his time in the Engliſh-Saxon Laws and Antiquities; and ſince his Opinion is clear for the Right of the Commons to appear in Parliament by Preſcription, even before the ſaid Conqueſt, I ſhall give you his Senſe of it, out of that little, but Learned Treatiſe, called his Archeion, in theſe Words:

'That whereas in the beginning of the Laws (viz. thoſe made by 'the Saxon Kings he there mentions) all the Acts are ſaid to paſs 'from the King and his Wiſe Men, both of the Clergy and Laity, 'each Statute being pen'd thus, and it is the Sentence of our Lord and 'his Wiſe Men; ſo that it appears, that it was then a received Form of Speech, to ſignify both the Spiritualty and Laity (that is to ſay, the Greater Nobility, and the leſs Commons) by this one Word Wites, i. e. Wiſemen.

'Now as theſe written Authorities do undoubtedly confirm our 'Aſſertion of the Continuance of this manner of Parliament, ſo is 'there alſo unwritten Laws, or Preſcription, which do no leſs infallibly uphold the ſame; for it is well known, that in every 'quarter of the Realm, a great many Boroughs do yet ſend Burgeſſes to the Parliament, which are nevertheleſs ſo Antient, and 'ſo long ſince decay'd, and gone to Ruin, that it cannot be ſhew'd, 'they have been of any Reputation ſince the Conqueſt, and much 'leſs that they have obtain'd this Priviledge, by the Grant of any 'ſucceeding King: So that the Intereſt which they have in Parliament groweth from an antient Uſage before the Conqueſt, 'whereof they cannot ſhew any beginning. And this is alſo further confirm'd by a contrary Practice in the very ſame thing; for 'it is well known, that the Tenants of Antient Demeſne do preſcribe 'in not ſending to the Parliament; for which reaſon alſo, they are neither Contributers to the Wages of the Knights of Shires, neither 'are they bound by ſundry Acts of Parliament, tho' they be generally penn'd, and make no Exceptions of them. But there is no 'Antient Demeſne, ſaving that only which is deſcribed in the Book 'of Doomeſday, under the Title of Terra Regis, which of neceſſity 'muſt be ſuch as either was in the hands of the Conqueror, who 'made the Book, or of Edward the Confeſſor, that was before him. 'And ſo again, if they of Antient Demeſnes have ever ſince the Conqueſt preſcribed not to elect and ſend Burgeſſes to the Parliament, 'then (no donbt) there was a Parliament before the Conqueſt, to 'the which Other Places did ſend their Burgeſſes.

I ſhall now give you the Opinion of that learned Antiquary Mr. Somner, who albeit he doth not ſpeak ſo fully as the Author laſt cited, in allowing the Commons a Right by Preſcription, yet he plainly contradicts the Opinion of thoſe Gentlemen, who will not allow the Houſe of Commons to have been more Antient than the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, for in his Verſion of that Old Engliſh Writ or Proclamation, iſſued by Henry the Third in the Forty ſecond Year of his Reign, for the due Obſervation of the late Proviſions made at Oxon by the Loandesfolk, (that is in Latin, Populus Terræ) and by this Author in a Manuſcript Verſion of it which I have ſeen under his own hand, is render'd Commons, whom he ſuppoſes to have been preſent at that Parliament, tho' the Writs of Summons are now loſt; this Writ, with the Tranſlation to it, you may find printed in the Appendix to my laſt Volume of the General Hiſtory of England.

I ſhall in the next place give you the Authority of the moſt Celebrated Mr. Selden, who in his Notes upon Fleta, ſpeaking of that great Queſtion which aroſe in Parliament in the Reign of Edward the Third, concerning King John's Donation of his Kingdom to the Pope, ſums up the Reſolution of all the Eſtates there preſent, in theſe Words: Ordines Univerſi tam generis Hieratici, quam Proceres, Senatus, Populuſq; ſolenni inita deliberatione, in Comitiis illi reſponderunt unanimes, irritam planè fuiſſe Johannis Donationem, utpote tam Sine Ordinum Aſſenſu quam juramento Inaugurati adverſum, which I ſhall for the ſatisfaction of ordinary Readers tranſlate into Engliſh, ſince the Latin is ſomewhat difficult; 'There all the Eſtates, as well the Biſhops as the Great Lords, Senate and People, (by which he means the Commons) after a ſolemn Deliberation in Parliament, anſwered the Pope, with one Conſent, that the Donation of King John was abſolutely void, as being made without the Conſent of the Eſtates, (that is, of all thoſe already mention'd) and was alſo contrary to his Coronation-Oath. From which Paſſage we may obſerve, that Mr. Selden here intended to tranſlate into Latin, that famous Judgment in the Parliament of the Fortieth of Edward the Third, (already cited) in which the Biſhops, Lords and Commons declare, that King John could not make over his Kingdom to the Pope, ſans leur Aſſent, that is, without the Conſent of all the Eſtates; whereas King John made this Reſignation with the conſent only of them, viz. ſome few of the Earls, Barons and Tenants in Capite, none of the Biſhops or Abbots, much leſs any Repreſentatives of the Commons being there, as you may find in Matt. Paris and other Authors Relation of it. And that he did not believe the leſs Tenants in Capite, in a body, were at the latter end of King John's Reign Members of the Great Council of the Kingdom, appears from what the ſame Author ſays in his * Titles of Honour; for he ſuppoſes there, that at the time when King John granted his great Charter, the greater Barons had procured a Law (tho' now loſt) to exclude the leſs Tenants in Capite, from any Intereſt in the Parliaments of that time, under the Title of ſuch Tenants; and in the following † Page, he ſuppoſes alſo, that the Alteration, whereby thoſe Tenants were no more reckon'd as Barons of Parliament, was not made ſo late, as about the latter end of Henry the Third, (as Cambden's nameleſs Author relates) but much ſooner, before the Magna Charta of King John; for (ſays he) in all Occurrences that I meet with ſince that time, I find no mention made of any Intereſt, ving, yet was it, to be ſure, within that of their Fathers, who ('tis not likely) would omit telling their Children of ſo remarkable an Alteration in the Government, as the excluſion of all the leſs Tenants in Capite, and the ſummoning of Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, to future Parliaments in their ſteads: But if this Alteration was made about the middle of Edward the Firſt's Reign, (as Dr. Brady ſuppoſes) it will be about twenty Years later than the time Sir Henry Spelman and Mr. Pryn allow it.

I ſhall next proceed to that Learned Antiquary Mr. Lambard, who was certainly the beſt vers'd of any one in his time in the Engliſh-Saxon Laws and Antiquities; and ſince his Opinion is clear for the Right of the Commons to appear in Parliament by Preſcription, even before the ſaid Conqueſt, I ſhall give you his Senſe of it, out of that little, but Learned Treatiſe, called his Archeion, in theſe Words:

'That whereas in the beginning of the Laws (viz. thoſe made by 'the Saxon Kings he there mentions) all the Acts are ſaid to paſs 'from the King and his Wiſe Men, both of the Clergy and Laity, 'each Statute being pen'd thus, and it is the Sentence of our Lord and 'his Wiſe Men; ſo that it appears, that it was then a received Form of Speech, to ſignify both the Spiritualty and Laity (that is to ſay, the Greater Nobility, and the leſs Commons) by this one Word Wites, i. e. Wiſemen.

'Now as theſe written Authorities do undoubtedly confirm our 'Aſſertion of the Continuance of this manner of Parliament, ſo is 'there alſo unwritten Laws, or Preſcription, which do no leſs infallibly uphold the ſame; for it is well known, that in every 'quarter of the Realm, a great many Boroughs do yet ſend Burgeſſes to the Parliament, which are nevertheleſs ſo Antient, and 'ſo long ſince decay'd, and gone to Ruin, that it cannot be ſhew'd, 'they have been of any Reputation ſince the Conqueſt, and much 'leſs that they have obtain'd this Priviledge, by the Grant of any 'ſucceeding King: So that the Intereſt which they have in Parliament groweth from an antient Uſage before the Conqueſt, 'whereof they cannot ſhew any beginning. And this is alſo further confirm'd by a contrary Practice in the very ſame thing; for 'it is well known, that the Tenants of Antient Demeſne do preſcribe 'in not ſending to the Parliament; for which reaſon alſo, they are neither Contributers to the Wages of the Knights of Shires, neither 'are they bound by ſundry Acts of Parliament, tho' they be generally penn'd, and make no Exceptions of them. But there is no 'Antient Demeſne, ſaving that only which is deſcribed in the Book 'of Doomeſday, under the Title of Terra Regis, which of neceſſity 'muſt be ſuch as either was in the hands of the Conqueror, who 'made the Book, or of Edward the Confeſſor, that was before him. 'And ſo again, if they of Antient Demeſnes have ever ſince the Conqueſt preſcribed not to elect and ſend Burgeſſes to the Parliament, 'then (no donbt) there was a Parliament before the Conqueſt, to 'the which Other Places did ſend their Burgeſſes.

I ſhall now give you the Opinion of that learned Antiquary Mr. Somner, who albeit he doth not ſpeak ſo fully as the Author laſt cited, in allowing the Commons a Right by Preſcription, yet he plainly contradicts the Opinion of thoſe Gentlemen, who will not allow the Houſe of Commons to have been more Antient than the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, for in his Verſion of that Old Engliſh Writ or Proclamation, iſſued by Henry the Third in the Forty ſecond Year of his Reign, for the due Obſervation of the late Proviſions made at Oxon by the Loandesfolk, (that is in Latin, Populus Terræ) and by this Author in a Manuſcript Verſion of it which I have ſeen under his own hand, is render'd Commons, whom he ſuppoſes to have been preſent at that Parliament, tho' the Writs of Summons are now loſt; this Writ, with the Tranſlation to it, you may find printed in the Appendix to my laſt Volume of the General Hiſtory of England.

I ſhall in the next place give you the Authority of the moſt Celebrated Mr. Selden, who in his Notes upon Fleta, ſpeaking of that great Queſtion which aroſe in Parliament in the Reign of Edward the Third, concerning King John's Donation of his Kingdom to the Pope, ſums up the Reſolution of all the Eſtates there preſent, in theſe Words: Ordines Univerſi tam generis Hieratici, quam Proceres, Senatus, Populuſq; ſolenni inita deliberatione, in Comitiis illi reſponderunt unanimes, irritam planè fuiſſe Johannis Donationem, utpote tam Sine Ordinum Aſſenſu quam juramento Inaugurati adverſum, which I ſhall for the ſatisfaction of ordinary Readers tranſlate into Engliſh, ſince the Latin is ſomewhat difficult; 'There all the Eſtates, as well 'the Biſhops as the Great Lords, Senate and People, (by which he 'means the Commons) after a ſolemn Deliberation in Parliament, 'anſwered the Pope, with one Conſent, that the Donation of 'King John was abſolutely void, as being made without the Conſent of 'the Eſtates, (that is, of all thoſe already mention'd) and was alſo con'trary to his Coronation-Oath. From which Paſſage we may obſerve, that Mr. Selden here intended to tranſlate into Latin, that famous Judgment in the Parliament of the Fortieth of Edward the Third, (already cited) in which the Biſhops, Lords and Commons declare, that King John could not make over his Kingdom to the Pope, ſans leur Aſſent, that is, without the Conſent of all the Eſtates; whereas King John made this Reſignation with the conſent only of them, viz. ſome few of the Earls, Barons and Tenants in Capite, none of the Biſhops or Abbots, much leſs any Repreſentatives of the Commons being there, as you may find in *Matt. And that he did not believe the leſs Tenants in Capite, in a body, were at the latter end of King John's Reign Members of the Great Council of the Kingdom, appears from what the ſame Author ſays in his * Titles of Honour; for he ſuppoſes there, that at the time when King John granted his great Charter, the greater Barons had procured a Law (tho' now loſt) to exclude the leſs Tenants in Capite, from any Intereſt in the Parliaments of that time, under the Title of ſuch Tenants; and in the following † Page, he ſuppoſes alſo, that the Alteration, whereby thoſe Tenants were no more reckon'd as Barons of Parliament, was not made ſo late, as about the latter end of Henry the Third, (as Cambden's nameleſs Author relates) but much ſooner, before the Magna Charta of King John; for (ſays he) in all Occurrences that I meet with ſince that time, I find no mention made of any Intereſt, tereſt, thoſe Tenants eo nomine had in Parliament, who doubtleſs were the Perſons excluded from it, whenever any ſuch Law was made; where, tho' I confeſs he is of Opinion, that the Tenants in Capite were at firſt Barons, equally with the Earls and Greater Barons, and as ſuch were Members of all Parliaments, yet he ſuppoſes they were excluded from them long before the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, and conſequently the Knights of Shires muſt have come thither in their rooms.

I ſhall conclude with Sir William Dugdale's Opinion in his Origines Juridiciales, who tho' he was poſſeſt with the ſame Notions, as Dr. Brady has ſince taken up, concerning the Commons not being ſummon'd to Parlirment until the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, yet in the main he alloweth them to have been repreſented after the ſame manner, tho' not by Members of their own choice; and he is ſo far convinc'd by the Authorities of divers Antient Writers, as to grant, that there were Repreſentatives of the Commons, who Page 15. were ſummon'd to Great Councils, as appears by his own Words in the beginning of that Treatiſe; where citing the Saxon Chronicle, that King William I. held his Courts or Councils three times in the Year, with all the Potent Men throughout England, viz. Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons and Knights, whence (ſays he) ‘it may be inferr'd, that if thoſe Meetings were his Communia Concilia, (as doubtleſs they were) then did ſome of thoſe repreſent the Common People, for that they were repreſented in his Great Councils, ſeems clear to me, partly from this Obſervation of Roger Hoveden, that King William in the Fourth Year of his Page 301. Reign, by the Council of his Barons, cauſed Twelve Wiſe and Noble Engliſhmen out of each County in England to be ſummon'd, that he might learn from them the Laws and Antient Cuſtoms thereof. I have not made uſe of this Teſtimony my ſelf, becauſe I am not ſatisfied whether thoſe Twelve Perſons were ſummon'd to a Great Council as Repreſentatives for the Commons, and therefore I ſhall more inſiſt upon the next Authority, he cites from Sculcardus, a Monk of Weſtminſter his Chartulary, concerning thoſe Perſons that were ſummon'd by the ſame King, from ſeveral Counties and Cities of England, for the Confirmation of the Charter of Privileges, that He had lately granted to the Abbey of Weſtminſter, which ſince I have cited in the beginning of this Diſcourſe, I ſhall but barely mention here, and only take notice, that this Learned Author has granted enough for my purpoſe, that the Commons appear'd in Parliaments not long after the Conqueſt.

SECOND PART.

I Shall now go on to the laſt Part of my intended Deſign, which is fairly to repreſent the moſt conſiderable Arguments and Authorities that have been produced by Sir H. Spelman, Dr. Brady, and others, whereby they would make out, that the Commons were never Repreſented by Members of their own chuſing, before the 49th of Henry the Third, and as Dr. Brady ſuppoſes, were omitted to be any more ſummon'd, till the 18th of Edward the Firſt; but that the Cities and Boroughs had no Repreſentatives there, until the 23d of this King, which, as it is the Doctor's Invention, I ſhall conſider by it ſelf at the end of this Diſcourſe.

I begin with Sir H. Spelman's Opinion, as you may find it in his Gloſſary, Tit. Parliamentum, which I ſhall thus render into Engliſh; Pag. 451. 'That preſently after the Conqueſt, King William having diſtributed 'all the Lands of the Kingdom to his Great Men, and other Follow-'ers, as ſupreme Lord thereof, they were abſolutely ſubject to Him, 'as well by Tenure as by Allegiance; ſo that by the Counſel and 'Aſſent of theſe He impos'd what Laws He pleas'd upon the whole 'Kingdom, and every inferior Tenant was included by the Vote 'of his ſuperior Lord, as we are by the Knights, Citizens, and 'Burgeſſes at this Day; and hence it was, that theſe Great Men 'were called by our Hiſtorians, Primates, Magnates, & Barones Re-'gis, & Regni. He further ſays, that he had collected above an hundred Precedents of the Statutes and Laws made in Great Councils and Parliaments, from the coming in of William the Firſt, to the latter end of Henry the Third incluſively, yet that he could never there meet with among ſo great a multitude of Authorities any Paſſage, whereby the Commons could be proved preſent in thoſe Aſſemblies; and then, after ſome Inſtances, whereby he would make out what he has aſſerted, he proceeds (as he ſaith, out of Darkneſs into Light) and placeth the main ſtreſs of his Argument for the Commons not being ſummon'd to any Council or Parliament until the 49th of Henry the Third, upon certain Clauſes in King John's Charter, which ſince it doth not at preſent fall under the Times immediately after the Conqueſt, I defer the citing of until I come to that King's Reign: And in the mean while ſhall, for the Reader's better Memory, as alſo for my own eaſe, divide the Obſervations I ſhall make from the Authorities produced by Sir Henry Spelman and Dr. Brady, according to the King's Reigns they treat of, into three diſtinct Periods; the firſt of which ſhall be from the beginning of the Reign of William the Firſt, to the end of the Reign of King Stephen; the ſecond, from the beginning of King Henry the Second, unto the end of King John; the third from the beginning of Henry the Third, to the 18th and 23d of Edward the Firſt; in the former of which Years Dr. B.

ſuppoſes the Knights of Shires to be firſt again ſummon'd to Parliament, after about twenty three Years omiſſion, from the 49th of Henry the Third; and in the latter of them he would have the Citizens and Burgeſſes to have been firſt again ſummon'd, after about eight and twenty Year's intermiſſion.

Append. to his Introduct. &c. p. 54, & dein. ad p. 60.

To begin with the firſt of theſe Periods, Dr. Brady in his Catalogue of Engliſh Councils or Parliaments, hath given us many Authorities, from ſeveral Antient Engliſh Hiſtorians, whereby he would prove, that beſides the Biſhops and Abbots (about whom there is no diſpute) the Lay or Temporal Orders, mention'd to be ſummon'd to the great Councils of thoſe Times, were the Comites, & Primates Angliæ, ſometimes comprehended under the word Barones in general, ſometimes under the words Principes, Proceres, Primores & Majores Regni, or elſe by Magnates, and Optimates Regni, without any mention of common or ordinary Men being ever ſummon'd to thoſe Aſſemblies, and that this is evident as far as King Stephen's Reign.

I forbear troubling the Reader with a repetition of all the particular Councils cited by Sir Henry Spelman and the Doctor; for I do not deny but that they are truly quoted, tho' not without ſome partiality; and therefore I cannot but obſerve the unfairneſs of the Doctor's dealing in this Matter, ſince he takes no notice of any of thoſe Great Councils, where I have already proved in the begining of this Diſcourſe, that not only the Tenants in Capite, but the Repreſentatives of Counties and Cities, as alſo the Inferior Military Tenants were often ſummon'd; as particularly to that Great Council, which was held by King William the Firſt, in the nineteenth Year of his Reign; as alſo to that held by Henry the Firſt at his Coronation; and another held at Salisbury in the ſixteenth Year of his Reign, when all the Perſons of any conſiderable Eſtates in England, of whatſoever Lords they held, were ſummon'd thither to do Homage, and ſwear Fealty to Prince William his Son; which Council, tho' the Doctor expreſly mentions, yet he cites no more out of Eadmerus, and Florence of Worceſter, than what makes for his purpoſe, viz. that the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, appear'd at this Council, but is ſilent as to any Others, altho' thoſe Authors ſhew plainly, that they were there as conſtituent Members.

But I ſhall next proceed to anſwer thoſe Authorities made uſe of by the Doctor; and ſhall ſhew, that under the general words abovemention'd, not only the Earls and Barons, but other Chief Men of England, whom we may call Commons may very well be comprehended: In the firſt place therefore I muſt acknowledge, that the Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, and Barons, as they had in thoſe Times moſt of the Lands, ſo they had conſequently the chief governing Power over the Nation; and therefore their Inferior Tenants, as alſo moſt of the Cities and Boroughs of the Kingdom, not then making any conſiderable Figure either for Riches or Power, it is no wonder, if they are not ſo often particularly mention'd, and taken notice of by our Antient Hiſtorians; yet however they may very well be comprehended under thoſe general words which the Gentlemen of the other Opinion have given us ſo large a Catalogue of; and I have already proved in the Introduction to my laſt Volume, lume, that as for the words, Principes, Primates, & Primores, they ſignify no more than the Chief or Principal Governours or Magiſtrates in any City, Nation, or Kingdom, without any conſideration of their Nobility by Birth or Degree, Quality or Eſtate; the like I may ſay for the word † Proceres, which is render'd in our Dictionaries, the Heads or Principal Men of any City or Commonwealth, which Term may (I ſuppoſe) as well take in the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, as the Inferior Tenants in Capite; and as for the words Optimates and Magnates, tho' the former of them is render'd in our Dictionaries Noblemen; yet it alſo ſignifies any Chief Magiſtrates or Governours; and in Livy this word is uſed to ſignify certain Great Officers among the Macedonians; but that under the laſt of theſe words the Knights of Shires may be comprehended, I ſhall prove by ſeveral Inſtances from our Records and Hiſtories: And for the proof of this, ſee * Rot. Clauſe 3 Ed. 2. m. 16. Dorſo. where you will find this Title, Inhibitio nè qui Magnates, viz. Comes, Baro, Miles, ſeu aliqua Notabilis Perſona tranſeat ad Partes tranſmarinas, where the word Magnates is apply'd to all Knights in common, as well as the Earls and Barons; and amongſt the common Writs of Michaelmas-Term, Anno 34 Ed. I. in the keeping of the Remembrancer of the Treaſury of the Exchequer, the Knights of Shires, and Barons of Cinque-Ports, are called Magnates; ſo alſo in the Statute 25. Ed. 3. de Servientibus, it is there enacted, Per Aſſent de les ditz Prelatz, Countes, Barons, & autres Grandes de la dite Comunaltè illonques Aſſemblez. So likewiſe in the † old Statutes printed in French, in that of the Staple made 27 Ed. 2. the Knights of Shires are expreſly call'd Grantz des Counteés, which Title you will find given them in ſundry other Records of Parliament.

† Vid. Littlet. Dictionary.

* P. R. C. p. 94, 95.

† Vid. Tottel's Edit. of Statutes.

And that not only they, but the Principal or Chief Men of the Cities of England, were ſtil'd Optimates and Magnates, appears from a Paſſage in William of Malmsbury's Hiſtory, where the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in the Synod held there, ſpeaking of the rich Citizens of London, ſays thus, Londinenſes qui pro Magnitudine Civitatis Optimates ſunt: And a little lower the ſame Biſhop, in his Speech to the Londoners in that very Council, ſays of them, Non decere ut Londinenſes qui præcipui habebantur in Anglia, ſicut Proceres, &c. And that they are alſo often ſtiled Magnates, appears from an antient Manuſcript, called, De Legibus Antiquis Civitatis, kept in the Archives of the City of London, where, under Anno Dom. 1229. (being the thirteenth of Henry the Third) an Act of Common Council was made, Per omnes Aldermannos & Magnates Civitatis, per Aſſenſum univerſorum Civium, quod nullo tempore permitterent aliquem Vicecomitem per duos Annos continuos, ſicut prius extiterant; ſo likewiſe in the ſame Book, Anno Dom. 1242, and the 29th of Henry the Third, mention is made of a Diſſention that then aroſe about the choice of a Sheriff; and the Book ſays, that Quidam de Vulgo elegerunt Nichol. Bat, ſed Alii per aſſenſum Majoris, & Magnatum elegerunt Adam de Bentley; where by Magnates are to be underſtood the Chief Men of the City, as Aldermen and Common Councilmen.

Hiſtor. Novel. Lib. 2. p. 189.

And as for the words Nobiles and Nobilitas, I have already proved in my former Introduction, that thoſe Titles did not antiently belong to the higher Nobility only, ſuch as Earls, Barons, &c.

but alſo to Knights and Gentlemen, as they do in France and Germany at this day; and that as low as the Reign of King Richard the Second, the Commous of England in Parliament are ſtil'd Noble, appears by a Speech Recorded in the Rolls of Parliament of the 7th of Richard the Second, ſpoken by Sir Michael de la Pool, then Lord Chancellor to the Lords and Commons, which begins thus: Y d'iſt vous Meſſieurs Prelats & Seigneurs Temporelx & vous, mes Compaignons les Chivalers, & Autres de la Noble Commune de Angleterre, i. e. I addreſs my ſelf to you, my Lords, the Prelates and Lords Temporal, and to you my Companions, the Knights and others of the Noble Commons of England; and I have already proved, that by the word Univerſa Nobilias Angliæ, who met at Runnemede to demand the Great Charter, not only the Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite, but others, eſpecially Knights and Gentlemen were comprehended; but as for the word Barones, ſince there is a great deal to be ſaid pro and con concerning the ſignification of it, as alſo of the Term Baronagium (which is from thence derived) I ſhall defer ſpeaking any thing to them, until I come to the Great Charter of King John, and to the Common Councils or Parliaments held before the 49th of Henry the Third, where thoſe words frequently occur, and then I ſhall have occaſion to enquire into the ſignification of them.

Rot. Parl. 7. Rich. 2. Part 1. n. 1.

In the mean time I ſhall give you a further confirmation of what I have here laid down, that the Commons, as repreſented in Parliament by Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, might be very well comprehended under the words Principes, Proceres, Nobiles, and Magnates, before the 49th of Henry the Third. I ſhall prove alſo, that ſeveral Authors, who wrote after the time that the Commons muſt be allow'd to have been ſummon'd to Parliament) do make uſe of the ſame Terms and Phraſes to expreſs the Conſtituent Members of it: I ſhall begin with the Teſtimony of Matt. of Weſtminſter, who, in his Flores Hiſtor. under Anno Dom. 1280, (being the ſeventh Year of Edward the Firſt) thus reckons up the Conſtituent parts of that Parliament which were then ſummon'd, Rex, Pontifices, & Principes Anglicani convenerunt in unum, and then enacted that famous Statute of Mort-main; and that the Commons were to this Parliament ſummon'd, I think I have already ſufficiently made out: And the ſame Author in the 24th of this King, ſub Anno Dom. 1296, tells us of a Parliament held at St. Edmund's-bury, and that the Primates ac Magnates Regni were thither aſſembled, of whom the King demanded an Aid; and that the Commons were preſent at this Parliament, appears by the Writ of Summons upon the Rolls; ſo likewiſe the ſame Author ſpeaks of the Parliament held at Weſtminſter in the 27th of this King, in theſe Terms, Dominicâ Secundâ Quadrageſſimæ citatis Magnatibus Regni apud Weſtmonaſterium, without any particular mention of the Commons; and yet it appears by the ſame Rolls, that they were alſo ſummon'd thither, and comprehended under this general word.

Fol. 409.

And as for Wikes's Chronicle, and the Annals of Waverly, tho' we have been beholding to them for divers remarkable Authorities for the proving that the Repreſentatives of the Commons were preſent in Parliament during thoſe times, when the Doctor will not allow their being there at all, yet they do ſometimes paſs them by, without taking any particular notice of them: As for Inſtance, the Annals of Waverly, under the Year 1265, being the 49th of Henry the Third, do only mention, that there was no ſmall Aſſembly of the Prelates and Proceres Angliæ, or Great Men of England, by the Command of the Earl of Leiceſter, who had then the King in his Power, without particularly telling us of what Orders or Degrees of Men theſe Proceres conſiſted; nor indeed is there one Hiſtorian of thoſe Times that gives us any Account of this ſuppoſed alteration in the Government, introducing the Repreſentatives of the Commons, who were ſummon'd to that Parliament: So that if that Roll, containing the Writs of Summons for the chooſing Knights of Shires, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, with the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, had happen'd to have been imbezel'd or deſtroy'd, as were many Others both before and after that time, I do not doubt but the Gentlemen whom we oppoſe, would have had the Ingenuity to aſſert from this general omiſſion of our Hiſtorians, that the Commons were not ſummon'd to Parliament at all, till the firſt time that they could find any Writs for their ſummoning enter'd upon the Roll, or elſe in ſome looſe miſapply'd Writ in a Schedule, as Dr. Brady hath done for the Knights of Shires, in the eighteenth Year of Edward the Firſt, of which I ſhall ſay more in due time.

I now proceed to the next Period, and give you the reſt of the Doctor's Authorities, and begin with Henry the Second, in whoſe Reign there were divers Great Councils held, in which the Lay-Orders are comprehended under the words Proceres and Magnates.

Roger Hoveden, in reciting thoſe that were preſent at the Council of Clarendon, ſays, that the Recognition of the Conſtitutions there made was in the preſence of the Biſhops, &c. Earls, Barons, & Procerum Regni; ſometimes the Councils under this King are ſaid to be held with the Biſhops and Magnates only; but moſt often, beſides the former, (viz. the Biſhops, &c.) the Earls and Barons are particularly mention'd to have been preſent at theſe Great Councils.

But * Benedictus Abbas, inſtead of the Barones, mentions a Council held at London by this King, with the Earls and Wiſeſt Men of the Kingdom, the word Sapientiores, being put inſtead of Barones: And the ſame Author ſpeaks of another Great Council held at Northampton, before both the Henry's, Father and Son, where the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons of his † Realm were preſent: And there alſo follows this remarkable Clauſe, viz. by the Advice and Conſent of King Henry his Son, and of the Earls, Barons, Knights, & Hominum ſuorum, i. e. (ſays Dr. B.) of his Tenants in Capite, or Military Tenants, King Henry made the following Aſſize, &c. This being one of the moſt remarkable Authorities the Doctor has produced for his Opinion of Tenants in Capite, I ſhall give you his Comment upon them in his own words, in his * Animadverſions upon Mr. A's Jani Anglorum, &c.

'King Henry the Second, when He had cauſed his Son to be 'crown'd in A. D. 1170, and the Earls and Barons to do Homage, 'and ſwear Fealty to him (ſaving the Homage and Fealty they had 'done, and ſworn to Himſelf) He granted Him the Government 'of the Kingdom in his Abſence, and cauſed a new Seal to be made 'for Him, by which He was to manage it. And it cannot be ‘ doubted, but that to make Him look more like a King, He aſſign'd ſome Earls, and Barons, Knights and other Military Men, who atturned Tenants to Him, or ſome new Earls and Barons were created, as immediate dependants on Him, and the Knights and other Military Tenants follow'd, and held on the Lands, Mannors, and Honours, that were aſſign'd to maintain and ſupport his Court and Kingſhip, and the King's Comites and Barones Terræ ſuæ, were the Earls of his Kingdom and Barons that held immediately of Him, and were his immediate Tenants in Capite: Thus far the Doctor; and from this Relation of Abbot Benedict, who lived and wrote in that very time, the Doctor alſo infers, ‘ That the Great Councils or Parliaments of thoſe times, conſiſted only of the Tenants in Capite, or whom beſides the King was pleas'd to call, and that He might call ſuch as He pleaſed; and the Aſſize was made in this Great Council concerning the Articles of Inquiry for Juſtices itinerant, and the Diviſion of the Kingdom into ſix Parts or Circuits, and appointing Juſtices for every County.

Having fairly ſet down the Doctor's Comment, and Concluſion from this Author, I ſhall now give you what may be ſaid in anſwer to it: Firſt, ſuppoſing it to be granted, that by the Words Comites and Barones, here twice repeated, are to be underſtood the King's Earls and Barons only, yet it does not therefore follow, that either by thoſe or the next Words, viz. Militum & Hominum ſuorum, are to be underſtood the young King's Barons, or other Military Tenants, as taken diſtinctly from his Father's; for tho' this Author has mention'd them apart, yet there is no occaſion for ſtarting any ſuch new Notions as the Doctor does from thoſe Words, Baronum, Militum, & Hominum ſuorum, ſince this ſuorum relates to old King Henry, as well as Terræ ſuæ, & Filii ſui, aforegoing; and * Radulphus de Diceto, who alſo lived and wrote about the ſame time, ſpeaking of this very Council, only ſays, that the King according to the Advice of his Son the young King, before the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Knights, and † Others his Tenants or Subjects, appointed Juſtices over ſix Parts of his Realm, three for each Part: Nor do I ſee any reaſon to render the Words, Militibus & Hominibus ſuis, in this as well as the former Author, by Knights and other Tenants in Capite, becauſe by the Milites may be underſtood the Knights of Shires, and by the alii Homines ſui, the Repreſentatives of Cities and Boroughs; And the Doctor's Friends have no reaſon to find fault with this Conſtruction, ſince he has expreſly aſſerted, that all the antient Cities and Boroughs, that ſent Members to Parliament, held of the King in Capite. Tho' there is no neceſſity for this neither; for the Words, Homines ſui, made uſe of by the Authors above cited, are not always taken for Tenants in Capite, or by Military Service, but for Subjects in general, as Sir H. Spelman has ſhewn in his Gloſſary, where under the Word Homo, he ſays: Dicitur præterea de eo qui nullo accepto Feodo nullo Prædio, ſe in alterius tradidit Militiam, Servitium, Obſequium, Clientelam, & in Genera de omni Famulo, Miniſtro, Subdito: Breve Henrici II. Juſticiariis de Norfolc. Præcipio ut S. Benedictus de Rameſia, ita bene & Libere habeat Socam ſacam ſuas & Homines ejus, that is, his Tenants by whatſoever Tenure, ſint in Pace.

In * the Reign of Richard the Firſt, the Conſtituent Members of his Great Councils are mention'd by our Hiſtorians, cited by the Doctor, under the ſame Titles, as in King Henry's Reign, viz. the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls and Barons, to which I ſhall ſay nothing here, till I come to ſpeak of this Word Barones, and its ſeveral ſignifications.

* Vid. Dr B's Hiſt. of Great Councils and Parliaments at the end of his Introduct. pag. 58

But before I proceed to the Reign of King John, I ſhall look back, and take notice of ſome conſiderable Omiſſions of Great Councils by the Doctor, in the Reign of Henry the Second, as particularly the Great Council held at Gaitington in the Thirty fourth Year of his Reign, (which I have already mention'd in the former Part of this Diſcourſe) to which were ſummon'd (as Roger Hoveden relates) the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and many others, both Clerks and Laicks. I have already obſerved, that by the Words Many Others, not only Tenants in Capite, but plain Commoners may be underſtood; but tho' the Doctor hath omitted this Council, yet † Mr. Pryn in his Plea for the Lords hath mention'd it, but not knowing well what to do with the Words, Multorum Aliorum tam Clericorum quam Laicorum, he will by no means allow them to mean any Repreſentatives of the Commons choſen by the People, but certain Perſons particularly ſummon'd and nominated by the King Himſelf to be Aſſeſſors and Collectors of the Tenths of all Men's Moveable Goods, which were granted by this Council for the Relief of the Holy Land; but there is no ground at all here for this Opinion, ſince the Clerks and Laicks, who are afterwards mention'd to be appointed the Collectors of this Tax, are not ſaid to be preſent at this Council, as were all the alii Clerici & Laici, abovemention'd, who did conſent to lay this Tax upon Lands and Moveable Goods, as well as the Biſhops, Earls and Barons.

The Doctor hath alſo omitted the Council held by Richard the Firſt, which I have already cited, where the Aſſize concerning Foreſts, was made with the Conſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons and Knights, by which laſt, at leaſt, the inferior Tenants by Military Service are to be underſtood, ſince the Tenants in Capite were then included under the Barons: 'Tis true, the Doctor in his Anſwer to Mr. P. who hath made uſe of this Authority, will have theſe Milites here mention'd to ſignify the leſs Tenants in Capite only, but gives no very ſtrong Reaſons to prove it, for he is forced to confeſs, that this Word does comprehend all ſuch as held Lands by Military Service, and did Homage and Fealty to thoſe of whom they held their Lands.

Having now ſhewn you ſome of the Doctor's Omiſſions of thoſe Councils, that he thought made againſt him, I ſhall in the next place proceed to the Reign of King John, in which there is little variation to be found in our Hiſtorians, concerning the Conſtituent Members of Great Councils or Parliaments, from what was in his Father's and Brother's Reigns, viz. the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls and Barons, only the Lay-Members are moſt commonly comprehended under the general Title of Magnates, until the ſeventeenth Year of his Reign, when the Great Charter was extorted from Him at Runne-Mead, which more particularly ſets forth the Conſtituent Members of the Great or Common Councils of the Kingdom in that time,

I ſhall now for the Inſtruction of thoſe who are not Maſters of the Latin, here ſubjoin a true Tranſlation of theſe Cauſes of this Charter.

Cap. 14. I will lay no Scutage, nor Aid upon my Kingdom, but by the Common Council thereof, unleſs it be for the redeeming of our Body, and for the making of our Eldeſt Son a Knight, and for once marrying our Eldeſt Daughter; and for this there ſhall be given a reaſonable Aid.

15. After like manner ſhall be done concerning the Aids of the City of London, and the City of London ſhall enjoy all her Antient Liberties and Free Cuſtoms, as well by Land as Water.

16. We further will and grant, that all other Cities, Boroughs, and Towns, and the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, and all other Ports, ſhall enjoy all their Liberties and Free Cuſtoms.

17. And for holding of the Common Council of the Kingdom concerning the aſſeſſing of Aids otherwiſe than in the three Caſes aforeſaid. And for aſſeſſing of Scutages, We will cauſe to be ſummon'd the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, and Greater Barons of the Kingdom, by our Writs or Letters.

18. And we will further cauſe to be ſummon'd in general, by our Sheriffs and Bayliffs, all Others who hold of Us in Capite, at a certain day, to wit, at the term of forty Days at leaſt, and at a certain place; and in all our Letters of Summons, we ſhall declare the Cauſe of the Summons, and ſo they being ſummon'd, the Buſineſs ſhall proceed at the Day aſſign'd, according to the Advice of ſuch as are preſent, altho' all that were ſummon'd ſhall not come.

By this Law, the * Doctor ſays, the way and manner of Summons to great Councils was ſetled, and made more eaſie than it was before; for by a former Writ of 15 Johannis, it appears to have been the Cuſtom for the King to write to every one of the Milites, Fideles, or Tenants in Capite, (which were no formal Barons) particularly as he did to the Barons; and that the Cuſtom was ſo, 'tis likewiſe imply'd in this Eſtabliſhment of Summons for the future, that it ſhould be by particular Writs to every Great Baron, and in general to all Tenants in Capite, by Writs directed to the King's Sheriffs and Bayliffs. From hence 'tis evident, (ſays he) that only the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite, were uſually ſummon'd to Great Councils; for if there had been any Others to have been ſummon'd, the like Care would have been taken to ſettle the way of Summons for them, as there was for theſe. And it is evident from hence likewiſe, Who were the Conſtituent Parts of the Great Councils and Parliaments in theſe and the following times, until the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, or Eighteenth of Edward the Firſt. And the Doctor endeavours to prove the conſtant Practice and Uſe of this Law confirm'd by a very clear Record, twenty Years after, in the Reign of Henry the Third, from a * Writ of that King directed to the Sheriff of Suſſex, reciting, 'that whereas the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and Others of our Kingdom, which hold of Us in Capite, 'have granted Us an effectual Aid of their meer good Will, and 'without Cuſtom, of every Knight's Fee two Marks, &c. He therefore commands the ſaid Sheriff, at the Order of the Biſhop of Chicheſter his Chancellor, to diſtrain all Knights and Free Tenants, which do hold of Him by Military Service in his County, or Bayliwick, for the payment for every Knight's Fee, &c. two Marks to be paid by them to Us.

* Clauſ. 19 H. 3. m. 8. Dorſ.

After the ſame manner it was written for other Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and Great Men.

From all which the Doctor does here (as alſo in other places of his Book) infer, that the Biſhops, Lords, and leſs Tenants in Capite only then made up the Great Council or Parliament of the Nation, and that all their Feudataries or Military Tenants were obliged to pay to the Aids they had granted the King, without ever giving their Conſents thereunto; and I muſt confeſs, that the Authority of this Charter, together with this Record and ſome others which the Doctor hath given us in his Anſwer to Mr. A. are (if taken in this Senſe) the ſtrongeſt Evidence which the Gentlemen have to produce for this their Opinion, and which if it can be fairly anſwer'd for, the reſt of their Authorities and Arguments will prove of no great weight or moment.

In order therefore to the giving the greater Light to what ſhall be ſaid in anſwer to theſe Gentlemen, I muſt in the firſt place take notice from Mr. Selden in his Titles of Honour, (and which I have already mention'd) that before this Charter, the leſs Tenants in Capite are never mention'd, by that Title, in any antient Hiſtory or Record, they being ſtil'd in the Conſtitutions of Clarendon by the general Term of Barons, as well as the greater; from whence that learned Author obſerves, that thoſe leſs Tenants in Capite were by ſome Law made in this King's time already excluded from our Great Councils, or Parliaments, properly ſo called: So that notwithſtanding the Doctor's confident Aſſertions, I cannot think theſe Clauſes in King John's Charter, were ever intended for a ſetled Form of ſummoning all future Great Councils, and that the Perſons therein mention'd were to be the only Conſtituent Parts or Members of them, until the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, and Eightenth of Edward the Firſt, and the Reaſons I have againſt it are, that all theſe five Clauſes abovemention'd are wholly omitted in all the Confirmations of this Charter by King Henry the Third, that are now extant, all that is ſaid concerning Scutage, being no more than this, in the Sixty fifth Chapter of this King's Great Charter, Let Scutage be taken for the future, as it was wont to be taken in the time of King Henry our Grandfather. Now it is very unlikely, ſuch conſiderable Clauſes as are in King John's Charter, ſhould have been omitted in this, whereby ſo great a Point was to be ſetled, as what Orders and Degrees of Men ſhould for the future have a perpetual Right to be ſummon'd, and act in all future Great Councils or Parliaments of the Kingdom; and therefore I ſhall here again remind you of Dr. Brady's own Inference concerning this Omiſſion, (tho'

B. A. J. he miſapplies it to the Reign of Edward the Firſt. * In this Charter (ſays he) then confirmed, there is no Proviſion made for any Summons to Great Councils or Parliaments, and the Reaſon may well be, becauſe the Conſtitution of Great Councils or Parliaments was lately changed from what it was in King John*'s Reign, and till the Forty ninth of* Henry the Third, &c. ſo that let this Omiſſion have happen'd when it would, it is granted by the Doctor to have declared a Change in the Conſtitnent Parts of our Great Councils or Parliaments; now this Omiſſion (notwithſtanding what the Doctor has fancied to the contrary) being found in the very firſt Charters of Henry the Third, therefore if the leſs Tenants in Capite had in King John's time made a neceſſary part of the Common or Great Councils of the Kingdom, yet I ſay, this Omiſſion of them muſt (by the Doctor's own Confeſſion) ſhew a Change in the Conſtitution of Parliaments above fifty Years before the Forty ninth of Henry the Third. And beſides this negative Proof, I have two other very cogent Reaſons, why theſe leſs Tenants in Capite were never intended to make up the general Common Council of the whole Kingdom: Firſt, becauſe there has not been yet found or produced any ſuch General Writ to the Sheriffs, for the ſummoning of them to ſuch Councils, either in the Reigns of King John, Henry the Third, or Edward the Firſt, during which time, we might very well expect to find ſome of thoſe Writs either enter'd on the Cloſe-Rolls, or elſe among the Bundles or looſe Writs of thoſe Reigns; and if the Doctor's Friends will ſay, that there were ſuch Writs, but they are now loſt, together with the Rolls on which they were enter'd, I will then aſk theſe Gentlemen, if this be a good Plea for the loſs of the Writs of Summons to the leſs Tenants in Capite during thoſe times, why it may not ſerve as well for an Anſwer to a great Objection they make, how it comes to paſs, that no Writs of Summons for Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, are found before the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, nor after that, till the eighteenth and twenty third of Edward the Firſt?

The other reaſon why the Tenants in Capite could not alone conſtitute the General or Common Council of the whole Kingdom is, from the laſt Clauſe in King Henry the Third's Great Charter granted in the Second Year of his Reign (and is already made uſe of) wherein it is recited, That not only the Earls and Barons, but the Knights, Freeholders, and all Others, of the Kingdom, granted the King a Fifteenth of their Moveables for the confirmation of it. Dr. Brady hath uſed his utmoſt endeavours to evade the force of the words contain'd in this Clauſe, by wreſting the words Freeholders, and all Others of the Kingdom, to ſignifie either the Tenants in Capite, or rather juſt nothing at all: But ſince I have already anſwer'd thoſe Cavils rather than fair Arguments, I need not again repeat what I have ſaid on that Head, but only deſire the Reader, if he is not ſatisfied, that he would turn back to ſee what hath been ſaid thereupon.

But to come more cloſe to the rightly explaining the true ſenſe of theſe Clauſes in King John's Charter, I muſt maintain the Diſtinction which the Learned * Mr. P. hath made in his Rights of the Commons, between an ordinary Commune conſilium Regni, which did conſiſt of the greater and leſs Tenants in Capite alone, and which was chiefly held for the granting and aſſeſſing of Eſcuage for themſelves and their Inferior Tenants by Military Service; and that more General or Common Council of the whole Kingdom, which took in the Repreſentatives and the Commons alſo, and was ſummon'd by the King upon certain extraordinary Occaſions, ſuch as granting a General Tax upon the whole Kingdom, and for making ſuch Laws and Statutes as ſhould perpetually bind the whole Nation; and for this I think we have Bracton on our ſide, who makes a diſtinction between theſe Taxes, and thoſe Services which were paid or perform'd, meerly by reaſon of Tenure; ſuch as were the Scutages mention'd in King John's Charter, and thoſe other Aids granted by conſent of Parliament: His words are theſe, † Sunt etiam quædam Communes Præſtationes, quæ ſervitia non dicuntur, nec de Conſuetudine veniunt, niſi cum neceſſitas intervenerit, vel cum Rex venerit; ſicut ſunt Hidagia, Corragia, Carvagia, & alia plura de Neceſſitate & Conſenſu Communi totius Regni Introducta; which I ſhall thus render into Engliſh.

* P. R. C. Append. p. 131.

† Bracton, Lib. 2. cap. 16. p. 37.

'There are alſo certain common Payments or Performances, which 'are not called Services, neither proceed from Cuſtom, unleſs in 'caſe of neceſſity, or when the King comes to Parliament; ſuch as 'are Hidages, Corrages, and Carvages, and ſeveral Other things brought
'in by neceſſity, and by the Common Conſent of the whole Kingdom:
Which Taxes here mention'd, being General upon all the Lands of the Kingdom, could never be granted by a Council of Tenants in Capite alone, ſince not above half the Kingdom was held of them by Military Tenure. And it is very remarkable, that the Scutagia, or Scutage-Taxes (the Aſſeſſing of which made one great part of the buſineſs of the Council of the Tenants in Capite) are not at all mention'd in this Author, as certainly they would have been, had thoſe Taxes been then impoſed by a Common Council of the whole Kingdom; and this Author wrote in the beginning or middle of the Reign of Henry the Third, and ſo within the time that the Doctor brings his Proofs of the Tenants in Capite granting Scutage-Taxes for themſelves and their Under-Tenants. Now, I cannot ſee any other reaſon this Author ſhould have to omit thoſe Scutages, but becauſe he very well knew, they were not granted by conſent of the Common Council or Parliament of the whole Kingdom, but by the Tenants in Capite alone.

And that even the greateſt Tenants in Capite could not grant or impoſe what Taxes they pleaſed upon all their Feudataries that held of them by Knights-Service, appears further by a Record which Mr. Atwood hath given us in his * Jani Anglorum, &c. being a † Writ of King Edward the Firſt, directed to the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Barons, Knights, and all Others his faithful Liege-Men in the County of Cheſter, reciting, that whereas the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Others of the Kingdom, had given Him a Fifteenth of their Moveables, He therefore deſires, that they alſo would of their Good-will and Courteſie grant Him the like Aid or Subſidy: And in the twentieth of this King we find another * Writ to the ſame purpoſe, reciting, That whereas the Good Men and Community of the County of Cheſter, as Others of his Kingdom, had graciouſly granted Him a Fifteenth part of all their Moveables, &c. now ſuppoſing (as † Dr. Brady commonly does) that theſe Probi Homines were the Earl's Tenants in Capite, and Tenants by Military-Service, what can theſe words Communitas Comitatus Ceſtriæ here ſignifie, but another ſort of Men diſtinct from them, viz. the Communalty or Commons of that County? by which it appears, that tho' Cheſter was then eſcheated to the Crown, yet it did ſtill preſerve its Antient Privilege of granting Taxes in a Common-Council or Parliament of that County-Palatine; whereas according to the Doctor's Notion, the King being now their ſole Repreſentative needed not to have been beholden to them for theſe Subſidies; ſince, if not as King, yet as Earl of Cheſter, He might have taxed them Himſelf, which however He thought not fit to do, becauſe He knew it was contrary to the Rights and Privileges of that County, which had ever ſince the Grant of it to Hugh Lupus, by William the Firſt, always been taxed by themſelves.

And that the County-Palatine of Durham had the like Privilege of being taxed by themſelves, and not by the Biſhop, may appear by this remarkable Inſtance in the eleventh Year of Edward the Firſt, when it appears from ſeveral Writs on the Cloſe-Roll of that Year, that He being at that time engaged in a War with Llewellyn, Prince of Wales, in which moſt of the Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite of the Kingdom attended Him, and wanting Money, yet not being then able to call a Parliament, He Himſelf and ſo many of the Nobility who were then in the Field, iſſued out Writs for the ſummoning all the Knights, Freeholders, and Clergymen of England, to three diſtinct Aſſemblies or Conventions: The Firſt of which, for the South-parts of England, was to be held at Northampton: The Second, for the North, was to meet at York: And beſides theſe there was a Third, which the Biſhop of Durham was likewiſe order'd to ſummon at that City; but the Buſineſs of them All was was one and the ſame, viz. to try what Aid in ready Money the Knights, Freeholders, and Landed Clergy-men would grant the King towards his War in Wales: And the reaſon why the County-Palatine of Durham did not join with the reſt of the North of England in the granting this Aid, was, becauſe they then looked upon themſelves as a ſeparate Body, that could not be Taxed without their own Conſents.

And that this continued down as low as Edward the Third, appears by a Record* of the fourteenth of that King, containing a Letter or Commiſſion to R. Biſhop of Durham, reciting, that whereas the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and the Commons of Counties, had given Him a Ninth of their Goods, that therefore the Biſhop ſhould convene the Magnates & Communitatem Libertatis veſtræ (to wit of his County-Palatine) ad certum Diem & Locum, with all convenient ſpeed, and that done, to perſwade and excite the ſaid Magnates and Communitas, to grant the King the like, or a larger Subſidy towards the maintenance of his Wars; which had been altogether in vain, if the Biſhop could in thoſe Days have taxed this County at his pleaſure. Now, the Biſhop of Durham, who held this County in Capite of the King might certainly have granted what Taxes he pleas'd, for all the People or Inhabitants of that County in the Common Councils or Parliaments of the Kingdom, if the Doctor's Notion of the unlimited Power of the Tenants in Capite alone, in granting and impoſing Taxes upon the whole Kingdom, had then taken place. And I have been lately credibly informed by the Right Reverend and Learned the Lord Biſhop of Carliſle, that tho' the County-Palatine of Durham was bound by the general Statutes of the Kingdom, yet they were never taxed but by themſelves, till the 25th Year of King Charles the Second, when they firſt ſent Knights of Shires by an Act then made for that purpoſe.

* Rot. Alman. 14. Ed. 3. m. 9.

Having now ſhewn the unreaſonableneſs, or rather impoſſibility of this Hypotheſis, of the Greater and Smaller Tenants in Capite thus taxing the whole Kingdom, I ſhall next proceed to give you the true ſence (as I conceive) of the above-mention'd Clauſes of this Charter in King John. By the fourteenth Article or Chapter here firſt cited, the King obliges Himſelf not to lay any Scutage or Aid upon the Kingdom, without the conſent of the Common Council thereof: This being granted on both ſides, all the Difficulty that remains, is to underſtand what this Common Council of the Kingdom was, and of what Members it conſiſted. Sir H. Spelman and the Doctor will needs have it to conſiſt of the greater and leſs Tenants in Capite, and no Others; but I can ſee no neceſſity for that, ſince if this Clauſe, Et ad habendum Commune Conſilium Regni alitèr quàm in tribus caſibus prædictis, be not made to begin the ſeventeenth Article or Chapter (as Sir H. Spelman and the Doctor read it) but is added to that which went before; then the ſenſe will run thus: That the City of London, and all other Cities, Boroughs, and Towns, may have and enjoy all their Antient Liberties and Free Cuſtoms, as may alſo all the Barons of the Cinque-Ports, and all other Ports, Et ad habendum Commune Concilium Regni de Auxiliis aſſidendis, alitèr quàm in tribus caſibus prædictis, i. e. and to have (or be part of) the Common Council of the Kingdom, for aſſeſſing or granting Aids otherwiſe than in the three caſes aforeſaid: And then the 18th Chapter will begin thus; Et de Scutagiis aſſidendis ſubmoneri faciemus, &c. the ſenſe of which is, that for the aſſeſſing of Scutages, the King would cauſe to be ſummon'd both the greater and the ſmaller Tenants in Capite there mention'd, according to the manner and form therein preſcribed: And from this way of pointing and reading this Charter it plainly appears, that there were two ſorts of Councils intended by it, the one Common and General for aſſeſſing of Scutages as a Tax, as alſo Other Aids that were to be granted by the whole Kingdom; the other Council conſiſting of the greater and leſs Tenants in Capite alone, was for granting and aſſeſſing of Scutages, either as a Tax, or as a Service to be paid by the Tenants in Capite only.

And for thus pointing and reading of this Clauſe, we have not only the printed Copies to juſtify us, but alſo the Original Charters and other Manuſcripts; all which have a full-ſtop after prædictis, and the next Sentence begins with the conjunction Et, with an E Capital: And Dr. Brady himſelf muſt ſure have approved of this Pag. 131. way of reading and dividing theſe Clauſes, becauſe in his Appendix to the firſt Volume of his Compleat Hiſtory of England, he has not only divided that Clauſe in the ſame manner as we do here, but after his Engliſh Tranſlation of that Article, concerning the Cities, Boroughs, and Cinque-Ports enjoying their Liberties (among which their having a Common Council of the Kingdom is made One) he adds this Paraphraſe, That the Citizens, Burgeſſes, and Cinque-Ports, ſhall ſend their Repreſentatives or Commiſſioners to the Common-Council of the Kingdom for the Aſſeſſment of Aids; but this being Pag. 169. contrary to the Doctor's Opinion, in his Introduction to the Engliſh Hiſtory, as alſo in his Treatiſe of Cities and Boroughs, in both which he will not allow the Cities and Boroughs to have ſent any Burgeſſes to Parliament, but only once in the forty ninth of Henry the Third, until the twenty third of Edward the Firſt, I cannot but believe, that this Tranſlation of the Magna Charta of King John, was done by ſome Friend, to ſave the Doctor the labour, who inſerted it into his Work without conſidering how much it contradicted what he had already written.

And therefore, without taking any further advantage of it, I ſhall proceed to ſhew the difference between theſe two Councils; the one of which, viz. that of the Tenants in Capite, from the higheſt to the loweſt, attended the King's Court ex more, or according to Cuſtom, three times every Year, viz. at Eaſter, Whitſontide, and Chriſtmas; and this was then call'd Curia Regis, the King's Court, where Matters of Right between the King's Tenants in Capite were determin'd, and where they themſelves were try'd by their Peers, if they had committed any Felony or Treaſon againſt the King and Kingdom; and here alſo Scutages were granted and aſſeſſed by the Tenants in Capite, upon their Inferior Tenants by Knight's-Service, yet not as a General Tax, but only upon ſuch as had omitted to attend the King in any Expedition againſt his Enemies, where they, with their Inferior Tenants, were obliged by their Tenures to aſſiſt Him.

But this was not the Commune Concilium Regni (as we now call it) for when the Antient Hiſtorians of thoſe Times take notice of the extraordinary meeting of this Great Council at the ſame time with that of the Tenants in Capite, which was held ex more (as I ſaid but now) at the three Great Feaſts of the Year, they make uſe of ſuch Expreſſions, whereby it may appear, that there was more than the ordinary Curia or Court of Tenants in Capite then ſummon'd, and often for the greater Eaſe and Convenience of his Tenants in Capite, and for the ſaving them a double Trouble of meeting twice, when one Aſſembly would ſerve: And as at the former of theſe Meetings only the Preſence and Conſent of the greater and leſs Tenants in Capite was neceſſary; ſo at the latter, viz. the Common Council of the Kingdom, not only the King's Barons, that held of him in Capite, but alſo the Barons or inferior Tenants of Biſhops, Abbots, and Temporal Lords, and great Tenants in Capite, were preſent either in Perſon or by their Repreſentatives, and ſo were likewiſe the Aldermen or Chief Magiſtrates of Cities, and Boroughs, before they were order'd to elect two Citizens, or two Burgeſſes, inſtead of them.

And as theſe two Councils were different, ſo likewiſe are the Expreſſions of our Hiſtorians concerning them; for when the King held his ordinary Curia, or Council of Tenants in Capite, they are only mention'd under the Title of Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls and Barons, to whom are ſometimes added the Milites or inferior Tenants in Capite, when they were no Barons; but when the King made a Union of both theſe Councils, the Phraſes and Expreſſions of our Hiſtorians alter, thus † Ordericus Vitalis ſays, that Rex aſcivit, that is, aſſembled together a Council of the Kingdom; or, ex præcepto Regis convenerunt, they met together by the King's Command; or, as Eadmerus hath it, Rex ſanctione ſuâ adunavit, the King by his Summons co-united them; or, as * Florence of Worceſter, Regni Nobilitas ſuâ ſanctione adunata, which was to ſhew, that ſuch Councils were not held ex more, only by meer Cuſtom, but by the King's particular Summons or Command. This that I have here given you being † Mr. Petyt's Scheme, aſſerted at large by Mr. Atwood, of the Great or Common Councils of thoſe times, held diſtinctly from thoſe leſs Councils of Tenants in Capite, I ſhall now give you Doctor B's Exceptions againſt it.

In the firſt place he * ſaith, that the whole, as Mr. Petyt hath delivered it, is falſe, precarious, and cannot be proved from any good Authority; but rather on the contrary, that the Barones Regis & Regni, were the ſame perſons; and that uſually all thoſe Barons, of what quality ſoever, did repair to the King's Court or Great Council at Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whitſuntide, doth appear to have been the Cuſtom of thoſe Times he ſpeaks of, from the Teſtimony of the moſt antient Hiſtorians. And for the proof of this, he there cites Eadmerus, who indeed mentions divers Great Councils to have been held in his time, where, beſides the Eccleſiaſtical Orders, he only ſays, the Primates, or Principes, or Barones Regni, were preſent; where note by the Word Principes, the Doctor tranſlates Princes or Chief Men of the Nation, whereas I have already proved that by the Words Primates and Principes, not only great Noblemen or Princes, but any Chief Men whatſoever may be ſignified: But the Doctor thinks he hath given a ſtronger Inſtance againſt Mr. Petyt's Notion, from the ſame Author, who tells us, that at Chriſtmas following, the

the Realm of England aſſembled according to Cuſtom at the King's Court at London; from whence 'tis manifeſt, that at thoſe times the Common Council of the Kingdom was held; from this alſo, as well as from the former Inſtances, he ſuppoſes it to be moſt evident, that the Barones, Principes, Optimates, & Barones Regni, did at thoſe three great Feaſts, pro more, according to Cuſtom, frequent the King's Court.

This Authority, as full as the Doctor thinks it, may (I hope) be very well anſwer'd, if you will pleaſe to conſider, that tho' this Author ſays the Realm of England then met at this Great Solemnity ex more, yet this is not ſtrictly to be underſtood as if only the Tenants in Capite were then all the Magnates or Great Men of the whole Kingdom, ſince the inferior Barons or Military Tenants had alſo a very great ſhare in it, beſides other Soccage-Tenants, yet ſince the greater and leſs Tenants in Capite, who came to this Feaſt according to Cuſtom, were then the Chief and moſt Conſiderable Men for Riches and Power, they are here ſtil'd by way of Eminency the whole Kingdom, or Chief Politick Body of it: Nor is Bracton himſelf to be underſtood ſo ſtrictly, as if the Whole Kingdom then conſiſted only of Earldoms and Baronies, for if ſo, what will become of the Eſtates of all the leſs Tenants in Capite, who were then no Barons, and therefore could not hold by Barony, as alſo of their inferior Military Tenants, beſides all thoſe who held of the King, or other Lords by Soccage-Tenure, and were then no ſmall number, as I have already proved, notwithſtanding what the Doctor ſo confidently aſſerts to the contrary?

But to proceed to the other Authority he brings, whereby he would prove that Mr. Petyt's Opinion concerning Barons of the Kingdom, who held by Meſne-Tenure of other Lords, and in that reſpect made part of the Baronage of England, is altogether falſe; Ib. pag. 115. he lays down as a Ground-work that William the Conqueror divided moſt of the Lands in England amongſt his Great Followers, to hold them of Him; that He made Earls and Barons of ſuch as He pleas'd; and they and their Deſcendants held upon the Terms of the firſt Grant, which was to find ſo many Horſes and Arms, and do ſuch and ſuch Services, &c.

In the next Paragraph he proceeds to ſhew us, what other ſorts of Men there were, among whom his Conqueror diſtributed the reſt of the Lands of the Kingdom: Other Lands (ſays he) were given to other Perſons for mean Services, as to be his Wood-wards, Foreſters, Huntſmen, Falconers, Cooks, Chamberlains, Goldſmiths, Baylifs of Mannors in his own Hands, and many other Officers, which in Doomeſday-Book are called Terræ Tantorum Regis, and ſometimes Servientium Regis; the reſt that follows being not to our purpoſe, I omit.

But before we proceed further, I cannot but remark the Errors this Author has committed, in affirming that William the Conqueror (as he calls Him) divided moſt of the Lands of England among his Followers; which Miſtake I have already confuted in the Introduction to the laſt Volume of the General Hiſtory of England, and therefore I need ſay nothing of that in this place, tho' I deny what the Doctor preſently after aſſerts, that every Biſhop, Earl, and Baron

Baron of England, properly ſo call'd, held his Eſtate of the King by Homage and Fealty, and yet for all that there were divers Others, who were in vulgar acceptation call'd Barons of the Kingdom, who did not hold of the King in Capite, and this he himſelf confeſſes in the next Page; but as for thoſe Other Perſons whom he has there nam'd, ſome of whom held Mannors, or ſmall parts or parcels of them, by Petyt-Serjeanty, I would be glad to be ſatisfied by the Gentlemen of this Opinion in one or two Queries concerning them; the Firſt is, whether all theſe ordinary ſort of Men by their Tenure in Capite were Barons of the Kingdom, or not? if they ſay they were, then it is evident, that this Title of Baron was a very common thing, and was communicated to very mean and ordinary ſort of People, both for Eſtates and Quality; and I cannot ſee why a Gentleman who held two or three Mannors of a Biſhop, or Temporal Lord, ſhould not deſerve the Title of Baron as well as one of theſe. Secondly, I deſire to be ſatisfied, how theſe Men were to be taxed by the Common Council of the Kingdom, whether by themſelves, appearing there in Perſon, or by their Repreſentatives; if by the former, I deſire theſe Gentlemen to conſider, whether this will not admit of near as great a number of Men of ſmall and inconſiderable Eſtates into the Common Council of the Kingdom, and conſequently (according to the Doctor's Notion) to be Barons of it, as Mr. Petyt doth, in ſuppoſing, that the Lords of Mannors, or better ſort of Freeholders of whatſoever Tenure, had thereby a Place in that Aſſembly, either in Perſon or by their Repreſentatives; but if he will not allow, that theſe menial Servants of the King abovemention'd, had by the Tenure of their Lands any Right to ſit in the Common Council of the Kingdom, I ſhould be then glad to know, how they were repreſented there, or could be any ways taxed for their Eſtates, when there were (as the Doctor ſuppoſes) no Knights of Shires, for thoſe Men being Tenants in Capite themſelves, the other Tenants of the ſame Order, tho' never ſo great, could not give Taxes for, and make Laws to oblige them.

The Subſtance of what the Doctor ſays in the following Paragraph, is, that whoever held of the Tenants in Capite, by mean Tenure in Military Service, held of thoſe Barons, or Tenants in Capite, by the ſame or the like Tenure, that they themſelves held of the King, which I do not deny, any more than what he ſays further of theſe Sub-feudataries, and the Power the King had over them and their Eſtates.

But the laſt Lines of this Paragraph do ſomewhat perplex me, and I believe there is a Fallacy in them, the Words are theſe, 'We never had any Baronies held by mean Tenures here in England; this, if he (viz. Mr. P.) denies, he muſt deny all Hiſtory, and our antient Law and Law-Books; and if he grants it, he muſt confeſs that every Baron was a Tenant in Capite, and by his own conceſſion he muſt then be the King's Baron, or Baro Regis. In anſwer to which I think Mr. P. may very ſafely allow, that tho' there were no Baronies in England, properly ſo called, but what held of the King in Capite, and conſequently no Barons ſtrictly taken, who did not hold by the like Tenure; yet it is not true, that there were therefore no Barons in a larger acceptation; ſuch as were thoſe who held of the Earl of Cheſter and Biſhop of Durham, becauſe theſe as Barons of thoſe County-Palatines, made one great part in their Common Councils for the granting of Taxes and making of Laws for themſelves and the reſt of the People within thoſe Provinces.

But beſides theſe, the Doctor himſelf grants, that there were Nominal or Titular Barons many, and ſuch were the Great Tenants to Great Subjects, and then inſtances in the Barons that held under Henry de Newburg Earl of Warwick, and Robert Fitz-Haymon Earl of Gloceſter, One of whom held ten Knights Fees of the Earl of Warwick; and the Doctor further grants at the end of the Paragraph, that ſeveral other great Subjects there were, who had Tenants that held five, ſix, ſeven, eight, or ten, or more Knights Fees under them, who had the Name and Title of Barons, as the Lord of the Iſle of Wight in that Iſland, &c.

Pag. 70. Col. 2. And to this I may alſo add, that Sir H. Spelman, in his Gloſſary, under the Word Baro, ſpeaking of theſe Barons of Counties, hath this remarkable Paſſage, ‘by this Title there ſeems to be underſtood in antient Writers all ſorts of Feodal Barons, reſiding in any County, (to wit) the Chief or Leading Men, and alſo all Liberi Tenentes whatſoever, that were Proprietors of Land, Anglicè Freeholders, as is already ſaid; but it is to be noted, that theſe Freeholders were not then ſo mean and ordinary as at this day; for the Noblemen or Gentlemen had not then parcelled out their Mannors and Towns into ſmall Eſtates of Inheritance, but as we ſee ſtill in Ireland, they kept them in their own hands, and managed them by hired Servants or Villains.

Ibid. After this the Doctor proceeds with an inſulting Air, and deſires ‘the Gentleman his Antagoniſt to ſhew in his next, if he can, where there was ever any ſuch kind of Tenure, as Tenura de Regno; whether there was ever any Man, that held an Eſtate de Regno? Whether Forfeitures or Eſcheats were to the Kingdom? And whether Fealty was ſworn, or Homage done to the Kingdom? with ſome other Queries not much to the purpoſe, which I pretermit; but to theſe I think I may anſwer for that Gentleman, and ſhew the Impertinency of them: As to the firſt Query, it may very well be anſwered, in the Affirmative, that there were ſuch Barons of the Kingdom, tho' not holding of the Kingdom, nor yet immediately of the King; but however they had either by themſelves or Repreſentatives Places in Parliament, and that appears plain enough by the Doctor's own Conceſſion, who grants, that there were certain Gentlemen of great Eſtates, commonly call'd Barons, and who were ſo by reaſon of their Tenures; and if they were in that ſenſe truly Barons, and were not the King's Barons, they muſt then be certainly Barons of the Kingdom in general; and that ſuch inferior Barons who held of other Lords were alſo called Proceres, i. e. Noble or Great Men, may appear from the Laws of Henry the Firſt, Cap. 25. the Title whereof runs thus, De Privilegiis Procerum Angliæ; the Law is, Si exurgat Placitum inter homines alicujus Baronum, Socnam habentium, tractetur Placitum in Curia Domini ſui, i. e. if a Plea ſhould ariſe between the Tenants of any of the Barons, having Socna, (that is, Suit of Court) let that Plea be decided in the Court of his own Lord; where you may obſerve, that the Inferior Tenants or Lords of Mannors are here called Proceres and Barones, and from them our ordinary Court-Barons took their Names, tho' the Lords were Feodatary Tenants to Others. And Mr. Cambden in the Introduction to his Britannia, firſt publiſhed in Quarto, was of the ſame Opinion, tho' he carries it ſomewhat further; for ſpeaking of the antient Barons of England, he ſays thus, which I ſhall tranſlate into Engliſh, 'but the Word Baron may ſeem to be one of thoſe Titles which time hath render'd of a better ſignification, for a long time after, (i. e. the reputed Conqueſt) not only Tenants by Knight's-Service, but thoſe who were Freeholders, and were by the Saxons ſtil'd Thanes, began to be called Barons; nor was it then of any great Honour; but in tract of time it came to be of that value, that under the name of Baronage of England, all the Orders or Eſtates were comprehended: And tho' I grant, that in the Folio Edition of this Work, the Author (becauſe this Paſſage gave ſome Exception to the Houſe of Peers) has wholly omitted it, and reſtrains the Title of Baron and the Baronage of England, only to the higher Nobility there mention'd; yet which of theſe Editions are moſt agreeable to the Senſe of Records and antient Writers, I muſt leave to the Judgment of the impartial Reader. But as the Doctor hath asked his Antagoniſt (as he thinks) many puzling Queſtions, ſo I ſhall now in my turn make bold to put a Query to thoſe of the Doctor's Opinion, concerning the leſs Tenants in Capite, (whom the Doctor in more places than one, confeſſes to have been then no Barons) and that is, whether did thoſe hold of the King by Barony, or not? if they will ſay they did, then why are they not in King John's Charter called Barons, but other Tenants in Capite? and if they will ſay, they did not hold by Barony, certainly then they were no Barons; ſo that tho' every Baron was a Tenant in Capite, yet every Tenant in Capite was not a Baron: But if theſe Gentlemen will ſtill inſiſt, that tho' they were no Barons properly ſo call'd, yet that by reaſon of their Tenure of the King in Capite, they and none Others had a place in the Great Council of the Kingdom, that is to beg the Queſtion; for the matter in diſpute is, whether in thoſe times theſe leſs Tenants in Capite, together with the greater, made the Repreſentative Body of the Kingdom, or Baronage in Parliament, or not? the Doctor affirms it, and Mr. Petyt denies it, and gives very good Reaſons and Authorities to prove, that the Word Baron, and conſequently Baronage, derived from thence, are not to be confin'd to the Tenants in Capite only, which has put the Doctor into a fit of the Spleen, for he will have none to be Barons, unleſs ſuch as held of the King in Capite; but the Falſhood of this Propoſition plainly appears in this, that the leſs Tenants in Capite, who were at the making of King John's Charter, and were no Barons, were yet ſummon'd to Parliament as well as they; and if ſo, I cannot ſee any reaſon, why other Inferior Tenants, who, as the * Doctor there acknowledges, were Men of great Eſtates, as enjoying eight or ten Knights-Fees apiece, ſhould not have a Place or Vote in Parliament, rather than a ſmall Tenant in Capite, or Petyt Serjeanty, who, it may be, had not above half, or a third part of a Knight's-Fee. But if theſe Gentlemen will ſtill urge, that however unreaſonable it may ſeem, the Law or Cuſtom of the King-

* Ibid. p. 116.

Kingdom had made it ſo, and for this, will cite the above-mention'd Clauſe in that Charter, whereby the leſs Tenants in Capite were to be ſummon'd by one General Writ to the Sheriff, to appear at the Common Council of the Kingdom; in anſwer to this, I ſhall make bold to affirm, that according to our reading and pointing of theſe Clauſes in this Charter, it does not appear, that either the greater or leſs Tenants in Capite were to be ſummon'd to a Common Council of the whole Kingdom, ſince after that Clauſe of the City of London, and all Other Cities and Boroughs having and enjoying their antient Liberties and Free-Cuſtoms, it follows, and for their having or being of the Common Council of the Kingdom, &c. and the next Clauſe only recites, that all the Tenants in Capite there mention'd, ſhall be ſummon'd after the Form therein preſcrib'd, for the granting or aſſeſſing of Scutages, but doth not ſay, that they were to be ſummon'd to do this in a General Council of the whole Kingdom, but rather the contrary, ſince their coming to ſuch a Council is here omitted.

* Dr. Brady indeed excepts againſt this Interpretation, and asks Mr. Atwood his Antagoniſt, if the Tenants in Capite were a great Council of the Kingdom for aſſeſſing Eſcuage only? Why was the cauſe of Summons to be declar'd in every Writ of Summons to the Great Barons and Tenants in Capite? If they were only ſummon'd about Eſcuage, or other ordinary buſineſs of courſe, the cauſe of Summons need not to have been declar'd, whereas it is there expreſly provided, that the King ſhall in all ſuch Writs declare the cauſe of that Summons.

In Anſwer to this, I deſire the Reader would remember what we have already allow'd, that tho' the ſummoning of the Tenants in Capite, for the aſſeſſing of Eſcuage, either as a Tax or Service, was one main buſineſs they were to meet about, yet were they not confin'd to that alone, for they might alſo meet for the Tryal of any one of their own Members, which was fit to be declar'd in the Writs of Summons, and they might alſo join with the King in making ſuch Temporary Laws or Ordinances as might continue in force until a Parliament could be ſummon'd to confirm them, as we find was practiſed by the King and his Great Council of Biſhops and Peers in the Reigns of Edward the Second and Third, when this Council of Tenants in Capite was wholly left off: And for this you may ſee the Titles of many ſuch Ordinances in our printed Statute-Books: And again, another main Buſineſs of theſe Tenants in Capite might be to give their Advice and Conſent for the making and carrying on of any Foreign War, in which they were bound to aſſiſt the King in Perſon, if He required it, or elſe might grant Him a Scutage upon every Knight's Fee for that purpoſe: And in this caſe I grant the Doctor's Citations from the Record to be true, that the Tenants in Capite did not only grant ſuch Scutages for themſelves, but alſo for their Under Tenants by Military Service; but that ſuch Grants were uſually made in full Parliament we deny, nor does the Writ (cited by the Doctor) to the Sheriff of Suſſex for the levying of two Marks Scutage for the Military Tenants of the Biſhop of Chicheſter, at all prove what the Doctor brings it for; for tho' it is there only recited, that the Archbiſhops, &c. Earls, Barons, and all

all Others of the Kingdom who held of the King in Capite had gracioully granted the King an Aid or Scutage of two Marks out of every Knight's Fee; yet it is not there ſaid, that this Grant was made in full Parliament, which methinks it ſhould have been, had this Tax been therein given.

'Tis true, the † Doctor in his Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, hath cited a Record of the thirtieth of Edward the Firſt, that ſeems more to his purpoſe; it is a * Writ to the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, &c. Earls, Barons, Knights, and all Others of the County of Kent, reciting, that 'whereas on the firſt of June, in the eighteenth Year of his Reign, the 'Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men of his Kingdom had 'unanimouſly granted for Themſelves and the whole Community thereof 'of in full Parliament, Forty Shillings for each Knight's Fee through'out the Kingdom, &c. and from thence he infers, that in the eighteenth Year of this King the Tenants in Capite did not only repreſent the whole Community of the Realm in Parliament, but were alſo the Sole Grantors of this Scutage, for Themſelves and All Others of the Kingdom; and conſequently, that they Alone were the conſtituent Members of this Parliament, as they had been of all other Great Councils or Parliaments, except that of the forty ninth of Henry the Third. I have in part already anſwer'd one of the Doctor's Inferences from this Record concerning the Tenants in Capite then making the whole Community of the Kingdom; but ſince in the place above-cited he makes uſe of it for another purpoſe, viz. to prove, that the Knights of Shires were not ſummon'd to this Parliament until after this Scutage was given: I ſhall defer the further Anſwer to what the Doctor infers from this Record, till I come to conſider the reſt of his Arguments upon the ſame Head, and hope then I ſhall be able to prove, that he was very much miſtaken in that matter.

* Rot. Pat. 30 Ed. I m. 1.

In the mean while I ſhall proceed to the third Period, and give you ſome other of the Doctor's Authorities, that during all the Reign of Henry the Third (excepting his forty ninth Year) the Tenants in Capite Alone conſtituted all the Great Councils or Parliaments of the Kingdom; but as for the Inſtances he has given us from Matt. Paris in the beginning of this King's Reign, to prove, that none but the Tenants in Capite were preſent in all thoſe Great Councils or Parliaments, till the time above-mention'd; ſome of them are indeed too general to draw any certain Concluſions from. The Lay-Members of thoſe Great Councils or Parliaments (for as to the Eccleſiaſtical I ſhall not concern my ſelf) are commonly mention'd by this Author under the general Terms of Magnates, Proceres, or elſe Comites & Barones, all which Titles (except the Comites) I have ſhewn do ſignify another Order of Men, beſides the Tenants in Capite, and ſome of thoſe Authorities which the Doctor hath made uſe of from * Matt. Paris, do make againſt him; as for Inſtance, that Parliament or Treaty, which under A. D. 1224, he mentions to be held on the Octaves of the Holy Trinity, at Northampton, where the King met and treated with the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and Many Others; here, by Many Others, muſt be meant the Repreſentatives of the Commons, ſince (according to the Doctor's vain Conceit) all the Tenants in Capite are comprehended under the Word Word Barons, or elſe they were not mention'd at all; but if thoſe of his Opinion will inſiſt, that by theſe Multis Aliis, the leſs Tenants in Capite are to be underſtood, as diſtinct from the Barons, I deſire then that they would ſatisfie me, whether the Word Barones does in other places of this Author include the whole Baronage of England, (of which the leſs Tenants in Capite made a conſiderable part) and if it does, why the ſame ſingle Word ſhall not alſo comprehend them in this and other places? for otherwiſe the Word Barones would be of a very various and uncertain ſignification, and muſt ſometimes mean the Great Barons alone, as in this Inſtance, and at other times muſt alſo take in all the other leſs Tenants in Capite, as the Paſſage in the Record or Hiſtorian will beſt ſuit the preſent turn, and the Hypotheſis they are to maintain.

* Ib. p. 323. But to proceed to the Year 1225, the ſame * Author tells us, King Henry held his Court at Chriſtmas, where the Clergy and People were preſent, with the Great Men of the Kingdom, and at this Solemnity, there was granted the King a Fifteenth of all Moveables: This Court being held at Chriſtmas, when the Tenants in Capite were wont to meet according to Cuſtom, the Doctor does ſuppoſe makes for his Opinion, and that by the Magnates are to be underſtood the Biſhops, Lords, and other Tenants in Capite, and by Clerus and Populus the Clergy and Laity in general; but I have already ſhewn the Abſurdity of this Interpretation, and that if the Magnates comprehended all the Lay-Orders, as low as to the leſs Tenants in Capite, then the Word Populus would be altogether needleſs and impertinent; ſince it would but be only a ridiculous Repetition of thoſe Orders that were already recited: Nor can the Doctor ever make it out, that by the Word Populus the leſs Tenants in Capite alone are to be underſtood from any antient Hiſtorian whatſoever.

Ib. p. 367. I confeſs the † Parliament or Treaty that was held A. D. 1230, ſeems primâ facie to make more for his Opinion, when (as Matt. Paris relates) on the Kalends of February the King meeting with the Prelates and other Great Men of the Kingdom at Weſtminſter, He required of them a Scutage of Three Marks of every Knight's-Fee of all who held Baronies, as well Laicks as Prelates: But in anſwer hereto I have one thing to offer, that I do not take this to be a General Council of the Whole Kingdom, but only a particular Colloquy or Treaty with the Greater Tenants in Capite alone, in which no others of the Kingdom were at all concern'd; nor is it call'd by this Author a General Council or Parliament, but only a Colloquy with the Great Men above-mention'd, and extends only to thoſe who held whole Baronies, which the leſs Tenants did not.

* Ib. p. 59. † Matt. Paris p. 435. But I will give you two or three other Councils mention'd in this Author, and cited by the * Doctor, which look ſomewhat favourably towards his Opinion; the Firſt is, under † A. D. 1237. being the Twenty firſt Year of this King, when He held his Chriſtmas Court at Wincheſter; and from thence preſently after ſent his Writs thro' all the Borders of England, commanding All that belong'd to the Kingdom of England, viz. Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Inſtall'd Priors, Earls and Barons, that without fail they ſhould meet at London on the Octaves of Epiphany (i. e. the thirteenth of January) to treat about thoſe Publick Affairs, which concern'd the whole Kingdom; dom; the Great Men yielded ready Obedience to this Summons, believing ſome great and difficult Affairs were to be tranſacted, and accordingly on St. Hilary's day an infinite number of Nobility, (that is) the * whole Body of the Kingdom, met at London; from whence the Doctor does infer, that if the Parties above-mention'd made up the whole Body of the Kingdom, there could be certainly no Repreſentatives of the Commons by Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, in this Parliament, the loweſt Order here ſet down being that of the Barons.

* Regni Totalis Univerſitas.

So likewiſe An. Dom. 1242, * the King writ to all his Great Men of England, viz. Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls and Barons, ſtreightly commanding them, that they ſhould All in general meet at London on Thurſday before the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin, to treat of the arduous Affairs of the Kingdom, that would admit of no delay. And then at the day appointed, the Nobility of all England, as well Prelates as Earls and Barons, met at London according to the King's Summons; then He ſent to his Commiſſioners, viz. the Archbiſhop of York, Earl Richard (the King's Brother,) and Walter, Provoſt of Beverly, to declare his Intentions, and ask their Advice; whereupon the ſaid Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls and Barons, gave their Advice to the King concerning his intended War with France; and when the ſaid Great Men the Commiſſioners, or Meſſengers, had reported that Anſwer to the King, they returned to the Baronage, and told them that they had only in part given the King a ſufficient Anſwer, &c.

* Ib. p. 579.

Ib. p. 580.

From whence Dr. Brady takes occaſion to ask his Antagoniſt, what clearer Proof there can be, that all the Biſhops, Abbots and Priors, and all the Earls and Barons of England, were here the only Baronage of England, for they were the only Perſons that met at Weſtminſter by the King's Writ, they were the only Perſons who receiv'd the Meſſage from the King's Commiſſioners, and conſulted about it, they were the only Perſons who gave their Advice upon this Meſſage, and they were the only Perſons who are here called the Baronage, to whom the Great Men the King's ſolemn Meſſengers (or Commiſſioners) return'd, after they had reported their Anſwer to the King, and told them it was but in part ſufficient.

B. A. P. pag. 108, 109.

And who (as he ſuppoſes) were then the only Magnates or Great Men of the whole Kingdom, as particularly expreſſed by the ſame † Author under A.D. 1244. where he reckons them up in the very ſame manner and order of Words, as they were in the Parliament immediately foregoing, viz. the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls and Barons. But the Doctor's moſt remarkable Authority is under the Year 1246. when in Mid-lent, on the day on which the Hymn Lætare Jeruſalem is ſung, there met at London, being call'd by the King's Edict, Parliamentum Generaliſſimum, a moſt General Parliament, the whole Kingdom of England, conſiſting of the whole Nobility, to wit, the Prelates, as well Abbots and Priors, as Biſhops, with the Earls and Barons, where he obſerves there is no Commons at all mention'd in this moſt General Parliament, no more than in thoſe aforegoing, tho' all the Great Men of the Kingdom were ſummon'd to them.

Ib. p. 696

Since I have put together the moſt conſiderable Authorities, that the Doctor hath to produce from Matt. Paris, to prove that there were no Repreſentatives of the Commons in any of theſe Parliaments, I ſhall now return one General Anſwer to all theſe four laſt Quotations: And as to the firſt of them, I obſerve, that by the Infinite Multitude of Noblemen, or whole Body of the Kingdom, who met at the Parliament at Wincheſter, there muſt certainly be more Perſons meant than thoſe expreſly mention'd in this Author, for taking in the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, that held of the King in Capite, together with the Earls and Barons properly ſo call'd, they could not amount in all to three hundred Perſons; and if it be inſiſted on, that the leſs Tenants in Capite are to be taken into the number of the Barons, I cannot allow of it, for had they been ſo comprehended, Matt. Paris would in ſome place or other have mention'd them particularly; ~~but~~ for I cannot ſee any reaſon, if they are not call'd Barons in King John's Charter, and were known at this time not to be ſo, why this Author ſhould not give them that Title in all theſe places: But ſuppoſe we ſhou'd admit for Diſcourſe ſake, that under the Word Barones, theſe leſs Tenants in Capite are alſo included, they would not have made at the moſt above ſeven or eight hundred Perſons more, and tho' theſe ſhou'd be added to the number of the Prelates and Temporal Lords, they would have made not above a thouſand in all, which would fall far ſhort of the infinite number of Noblemen mention'd by our Author, as preſent at this Parliament; and therefore to make up this Infinite Multitude, if all the Tenants in Capite appear'd there in Perſon, their Inferior Military Tenants muſt likewiſe have attended them, as they did at the Great Council or Parliament, when Magna Charta was firſt granted; and, as this Author alſo aſſures us, they did at that Great Parliament at Oxford, when thoſe famous Proviſions or Statutes (which took their Name from that Place) were enacted; but then the conſequence will be, that ſuppoſing they were there, they muſt alſo make up the totalis Nobilium Univerſitas, or whole Body of Nobility mention'd by this Author, and conſequently then it did not conſiſt of the Biſhops, Lords, and Tenants in Capite alone, as the Doctor conceives.

As for the other three Quotations, which are brought to prove, that the Magnates or Great Men of the Kingdom then only conſiſted of the Orders there mention'd, the loweſt of which were the Barons, I think I may ſatisfie any indifferent Reader about it, by offering the Gentlemen that maintain this Opinion, this ſhort Dilemma; either the Word Barons there mention'd by Matt. Paris, includes the leſs Tenants in Capite as well as the greater, or it does not; if it does include them, then it is evident, that thoſe, who were no Barons of the Kingdom, had equal Places with them who were truly and properly ſo; and then I can ſee no reaſon why the Barons of Counties, or Lords of Mannors, tho' Tenants by Military Service to the greater and ſmaller Tenants in Capite, (or at leaſt their Repreſentatives) ſhould not have had Places in Parliament as well as the Tenants in Capite themſelves, and that for the reaſon already given, of the great ſhare they had in the Property of the Lands of the Nation, being much more than what moſt of the ſmaller Tenants in Capite at that time enjoy'd; but if theſe inferior Tenants in Capite be deny'd to have been Members of theſe Parliaments, then it will follow, that theſe were no Common Councils or Parliaments, according to the Form of King John's Charter.

I ſhall now proceed to the reſt of the Authorities which the Doctor has brought to prove, that the * Univerſity of England (as he calls it) or Repreſentative Body of the Kingdom in Parliament, conſiſted only of the Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite; and for this we are to look back to A. D. 1245, when Matt. Paris tells us, that King Henry began to deteſt the inſatiable Avarice of the Court of Rome, and the injurious Encroachments, and unlawful Rapines made by Her upon the whole Kingdom, and the Church alſo; and therefore (ſays he) there was an elegant Epiſtle then compos'd by the Univerſity of the Kingdom, which ſets forth the execrable Papal Extortions, and intolerable Exactions of his Legates, and of divers Prieſts executing an unheard of Power; with which Epiſtle certain Noble and Diſcreet Men were ſent to the Council at Lyons to make complaint thereof, and eſpecially of the Exactions of a Tribute, unto which the Univerſity of the Kingdom never gave their Conſents; there were therefore choſen for that purpoſe, and ſent in the name of the Univerſity of England to the ſaid Council, Earl Roger Bigod, with four other Barons there named, and Mr. William Powerick, who was their Secretary; and then the Doctor proceeds to give an Account, that the Barons intended to meet at a great Tourneament at Luton and Dunſtable, which was forbid by the King; however, Fulk Fitz-Warin was ſent on behalf of this Univerſity of England to Maſter Martin the Pope's Clerk (who was his Legate and Inſtrument of the great Exactions aforeſaid) but I leave the Reader to conſult the * Doctor, or rather the Author himſelf, for the particulars of this Story; the Sum of which is, that when Fulk had commanded this Clerk or Nuncio immediately to be gone out of England; he thereupon asking at whoſe Command; Fulk preſently anſwer'd, at that of the Univerſity or Body of Military Men, that lately appear'd at Luton and Dunſtable, who do by me lay upon you this Injunction; and then threaten'd, if he did not obey it, he ſhould be cut in pieces; whereupon Mr. Martin being much terrified at this rough Meſſage, went immediately to the King, and asked Him, whether it was done by his Authority; the King told him no, He was not the Author of any ſuch thing, but my Barons (ſaith He) can ſcarce contain themſelves from an Inſurrection againſt Me, for that I have ſo long ſuffer'd your Depredations and Injuries in my Kingdom.

B. A. P. p. 103. 104.
* Univerſitas Regni.
Pag. 658. 659.
* B A P. Pag. 104.

From whence the * Doctor obſerves, that this Story makes it plain, who were then the Univerſitas Regni (to wit) the Barons, or the Univerſitas Armatorum, the Univerſity of Armed or Military Men, met to hold a Tourneament, and who were thoſe whom the King calls his Barons. Now, whether the Doctor hath made out what he is to prove by both theſe Relations, I ſhall leave it to the unprejudiced Reader.

* Ib. p 105.

In the firſt, the Univerſity of England choſe four Commiſſioners to go to the Pope, who were all Great Barons; does it therefore follow, that none beſides the Great Barons of the Kingdom could chuſe them? By this way of arguing, none of the ſmaller Tenants in Capite had any hand in this Choice, nor were part of the Univerſity of the Kingdom, becauſe none but Barons and Great Tenants in Capite were ſent to repreſent the Body of the Kingdom at the Council of Lyons; and ſuppoſing the Repreſentatives of the Commons to have been preſent when theſe four Commiſſioners were choſen, could they not have pitched upon, four of the wiſeſt and greateſt Lords of England, on the behalf of themſelves and the whole Kingdom, tho' they did not think any of their own Order good enough to go on an Errand of ſo great an Importance?

As for the ſecond part of this Relation, it is certain that Fulk Fitz-Warin was ſent on the behalf of the Univerſity of the whole Kingdom, to Mr. Martin the Pope's Clerk or Nuncio; and who this Univerſity was, appears by what follows, that they were the Univerſity of Military or Armed Men, who lately appear'd at Luton and Dunſtable; where you may note, that the Author does not here call this Body the Univerſity of the Earls and Barons, and Tenants in Capite, but only the Univerſity of Military Men in general; that is, the Inferior Tenants by Knight's Service, as alſo thoſe of Eſtates who held in free Socage, might be there in Arms, and join in this Meſſage to the Pope's Clerk, unleſs the Doctor can prove, which will be very hard, that none but the Tenants in Capite were admitted to be Parties at this general Tourneament; but if other Military Men were there (as is moſt likely) they alſo made a part of this Univerſity or General Body of the Kingdom, and theſe are they whom the King calls his Barons, as well as the reſt, as the Doctor himſelf here grants in his Obſervation on this Story.

But that the Prelates, Earls, and Barons, with the leſs Tenants in Capite, could not then make this Common Univerſity, or general Body of the Kingdom, appears from the Authority the * Doctor has given us from the ſame Hand, under the Year 1644, when the Earls, and Barons declared to the Biſhops, that they could do nothing as to the granting the King an Aid, without the conſent of the Common Univerſity of the Kingdom, and then follow the Names of thoſe Biſhops and Noblemen, who were by Common Conſent of the whole Body choſen for that purpoſe; which Anſwer of the Earls and Barons, to the Biſhops and other Prelates, had been very impertinent, if they alone, together with the Tenants in Capite, (who then ſat with them in the ſame Houſe, whenever they were aſſembled together) had been the whole Univerſity or Body of the Kingdom, as I have already proved in the former part of this Diſcourſe.

* Ib. p. 109.

But ſince I have ſaid enough in the precedent part of this Diſcourſe, to prove, that the Univerſity (as the Doctor terms it) or Politick Body of the Kingdom, conſiſted of another Body of Men, than the Biſhops, Lords, and Tenants in Capite; and alſo that the words Communitas Regni, or as in French, Le Commune de la Terre, which is the ſame with the Univerſitas Regni abovemention'd, did alſo ſignifie not only the Earls and Barons, but the Repreſentatives of the Commons alſo, I ſhall ſay no more upon thoſe Heads.

Thus having given you the Doctor's Reaſons and Authorities, why he ſuppoſes that the great and ſmall Tenants in Capite were the only Repreſentatives of the Nation in the Great Councils or Parliaments of thoſe Times, till the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, and that before that the Commons had no Repreſentatives there; I ſhall in the next place proceed with the reſt of my Authorities, whereby I hope to make it clear, that there was a ſeparate or diſtinct Council of Tenants in Capite, both great and ſmall, different from that of the Common or General Council of the Kingdom, ſummon'd upon ſpecial occaſions. And this I ſhall do by two ſeveral Methods, or ways of Proof; the firſt of which ſhall be from Antient Records, and the Other from Hiſtorians, either in Print or Manuſcript. To begin with the former, I ſhall ſhew, that not only the Temporal Barons and Tenants in Capite did often meet and hold diſtinct Councils, but that alſo the Eccleſiaſtical Tenants in Capite did likewiſe ſometimes meet at the ſame time, and for the ſame purpoſe, viz. to grant the King a Scutage out of the Lay-Fees which they held of Him; which will appear by this * Record on the Patent Roll of the Fifteenth of Henry the Third, which is in Engliſh thus, when We '(i. e. the King) requir'd of the Prelates of England, that they ſhould 'grant Us an Aid for Our great neceſſity, and the Biſhops, Abbots, 'Abbeſſes, Priors, Prioreſſes, who held of Us in Capite, have libe'rally granted Us ſuch an Aid, viz. of every of their Knight's Fees, 'Forty Shillings, for which they were anſwerable to the King, when 'they do Him Knight's Service, &c. where you may obſerve, that not only the Biſhops and Abbots who held in Capite, but the Abbeſſes and Prioreſſes alſo who held of the King in Capite, join'd in this Scutage; and ſince it cannot be ſuppos'd that theſe Abbeſſes and Prioreſſes could leave their Houſes and appear in Perſon at ſuch Meetings, they muſt be ſuppos'd to do it by their Oeconomiſts or Stewards, as their lawful Proxies in thoſe Aſſemblies; which, tho' they were not Great Councils or Parliaments, yet requir'd the Conſent of the major part of the Tenants in Capite, either by Themſelves or their Repreſentatives: But that this was a Council conſiſting of Tenants in Capite only, may appear by another * Record of the Forty ſecond of this King, wherein it is recited, that whereas it was provided by a Common Council of the Barons and Other Great Men, who had been with the King in Wales, and that He Himſelf, and they who had done their Service there, were therefore to receive their Scutage (to wit) Forty Shillings of every Scute or Fee, for his Army in Wales, in the Forty firſt Year of his Reign; He therefore commands the Barons of his Exchequer, that they ſhould cauſe to levy the ſaid Scutage on all Knight's Fees that were held of Him in Capite, and upon Wards being in the King's hand, except the Fees of thoſe who had his Writs for receiving their own Scutage; from which Record it appears, that this was only a Common Council of Tenants in Capite, who had attended on the King, and done their Service in this Welſh Expedition, and concern'd none elſe but ſuch Tenants by Knights's Service, and their Military Tenants, who had fail'd to do their Service, and is indeed ſuch a Tax as is expreſly reſerved by that Clauſe of King John's Charter before-cited, whereby Scutage is to be aſſeſſed by All the Tenants in Capite.

* Rot. Pat. 15 H. 3. m. 3. See it printed in Latin in Mr. A's Jani Anglorum, &c. pag. 229.

* Inter Commun. de Term. Sancti Mich. Anno 42. H. 3. Rot. 4. de Scutag. Levand. cited at large in Jani Anglorum p. 240.

But when a general Tax or Aid was granted by the whole Kingdom, the Stile of theſe Councils runs much otherwiſe, as appears by the Cloſe-Roll of the Fourteenth of this King, where it is recited in the Record, that * Omnes Magnates & Fideles totius Regni noſtri, all the Great Men and Faithful Subjects of the whole Kingdom had granted the King de qualibet Carucatâ duos ſolidos, i. e. that it hence appears, that this was a Grant of Carvage, which not being a Scutage-Service, nor yet a Scutage-Tax, was therefore to be granted by the Common Council of the whole Kingdom, which being aſſeſſed not only upon Tenants in Capite, and their Feudatary Tenants, but upon each Plough-Land of the whole Kingdom, muſt have been granted (as I have already proved out of Bracton, ſpeaking of Carvage) de conſenſu & communi conſilio totius Regni; for otherwiſe the Tenants in Capite could never have charged all the Lands of England, which were not held of them by Military Tenure.

* Rot. Clauſ. 4. H. 3. m. 5. cited in Jani Angl. p. 241.

But I ſhall yet make it plainer by another Record of this King, in theſe words, which being tranſlated runs thus; 'The King to the 'Sheriff of Devonſhire, Greeting, Know ye, that the Archbiſhops, 'Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and Clerks, having Lands not belonging 'to their Churches, as alſo the Earls, Barons, Knights, Freemen, 'and Villani, (i. e. Townſmen and Villagers) of our Kingdom have 'granted Us for an Aid a Fortieth part of their Moveables. * Dr. Brady hath alſo made uſe of a like Writ, almoſt in the ſame words, of the Twenty firſt of this King, when the ſame Parties laſt mention'd, granted Him an Aid of a Thirtieth part of all their Moveables; all the difference between them is, that in this laſt Record the Earls, Barons, Knights, and Freemen grant this pro ſe & ſuis Villanis, which the Doctor tranſlates Villains, yet I think it rather ſignifies Villagers or Farmers by Socage Services, ſince Villains having no Property could pay no Taxes; however, this is plain, that this Grant being made by all the Freemen of the Kingdom, muſt have been granted in another Council than that of Tenants in Capite.

And to let you ſee that the Antient Manuſcript Chronicles of this Age, give the ſame ſenſe to the Expreſſions of theſe Records, and that in the ſame Terms, I ſhall give you a remarkable Paſſage, which a Friend of mine took out of a † Manuſcript called, Chronica Monaſterii de Hageny in the Cottonian Library, as antient as the Times we are now treating of; the words are theſe, Anno 17 Henrici Regis quarti; (where note, that the Year is miſtaken for the 16th, but the King is the ſame Henry the Third being often called the Fourth in reſpect to King Henry, Son to Henry the Second:) The ſame King received from the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and Clerks, having Lands which did not belong to their Churches; as alſo from the Earls, Barons, Knights, and Villani, Townſmen and Villagers of the Kingdom of England, a Fortieth part of all their Moveables for an Aid: And to let you ſee that the Author here makes a difference between the Great Men of the Kingdom and Barons, he proceeds thus; *as He had alſo done in the eighth, or rather ninth Year of his Reign, in which, by the common Aſſent and Good-will of his Great Men, and of all other his Lay-Subjects of the Kingdom, He received a * Fifteenth part of all Moveable Goods*; where ſuppoſing in Dr. Brady's own ſenſe, that by the Magnates here mention'd, the Lords (and if he pleaſes) the Tenants in Capite are to be underſtood, yet by the Alii Laici, all the Other Lay-Subjects, of what Degree ſoever, muſt be underſtood, and and are the ſame with the Liberi Homines and Villani mention'd in the Record, who join'd in the giving of this Tax by their Repreſentatives in Parliament.

I know † Dr. Brady endeavours to evade the Force of this Record, by making theſe Liberi Homines or Freemen, therein mention'd, to ſignify only ſuch Tenants in Capite as were not Knights in a ſtrict ſenſe; and for this refers us to his Gloſſary: But whoever will look there, under the Title of Liberi Homines, and Liberi Tenentes, will find, that from the very Authorities he there cites, theſe Words Liberi Homines do not only ſignify his Tenants in Capite, but alſo all other Free or Military Tenants whatſoever; and thoſe Words muſt be alſo more comprehenſive, and extend to all ſuch Tenants as held Lands by Socage-Tenure, and ſuch as were Tenants of the King by Fee-Farm on Rent certain, as alſo all Tenants in Petyt-Serjeanty and Gavelkind, which taken altogether, were no ſmall number, as I have already proved.

† B. A. J. p. 220.

But ſince the * Doctor hath a few leaves before endeavour'd to prove from certain Records patch'd together, that the Tenants in Capite granted and aſſeſſed all Aids or Publick Taxes upon all Perſons of the Kingdom, whether they held by Knight's-Service or otherwiſe, that were able to pay; I will here ſet down the effect of thoſe Records.

* Ib. p. 170. The next Authority the * Doctor cites, is of a Fifteenth part of all the Moveables of England, as well of Eccleſiaſticks as Laicks, which was given to Henry the Third, in the Ninth Year of his Reign, by the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, Abbots, and Priors only, for the confirming of King John's Charter; and I ſhall only ſay this to it at preſent, that it plainly ſhews what Miſtakes Men, otherwiſe learned and diligent, may run into, by wholy truſting to Hiſtorians, without firſt conſulting Records and other Publick Inſtruments; for if the Doctor had been but pleas'd to have conſulted any Printed or Manuſcript Copy of the next Charter of the Ninth of Henry the Third, he might have there found at the concluſion of it, that not only the Parties here recited, but the Knights, Freeholders, and all Others of the Kingdom, had their ſhare in the granting of this Fifteenth. But I am ſenſible this would have no influence upon the Doctor, for he is reſolved to have the Liberi Tenentes and Omnes de Regno there mention'd, to ſignify no Others than Tenants in Capite; but with what Reaſon and Probability he ſo poſitively aſſerts this, I ſhall leave to the Reader's more unbyaſs'd Conſideration, who will give himſelf the leiſure to peruſe what I have already ſaid in the former part of this Diſcourſe, in anſwer to the forced Interpretations the Doctor hath given of thoſe Words.

But I ſhall now proceed to what is more material, and return an Anſwer to the former Records cited by the Doctor, to prove, that the Common Council of the Kingdom, during the Reign of King John, and the beginning of Henry the Third, was wholly made up of the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite, and that they could tax the whole Nation after what manner they pleaſed. Indeed I can find no more of the Lay-Orders mention'd, that granted this Tax upon Moveables at the Council of Oxford; and that they are called Magnates Regni in the Writ to the Archdeacon and Clergy of Canterbury above cited; and ſo they are likewiſe in the third Record concerning the Aid that was granted for the Holy Land; but Ibid. p. 214 the Doctor ſhould have done well firſt, before his big-ſwelling Words, to have proved, that the Word Magnates did only ſignify the Peers, and other leſs Tenants in Capite; and that as fairly as I have done, that under this Term, not only the Knights of Shires, but the Citizens and Burgeſſes may be alſo comprehended; for the Doctor himſelf in this very Anſwer to Mr. Atwood does not deny, but that the Knights of Shires were called Magnates, and Grantz des Counties, in the Rolls of Parliament; his Words are theſe that follow, viz.

‘ It's very true, that in our antient Parliament Rolls, the Knights ‘ of Shires are ſometimes called Grantz des Counties, or Great Men ‘ of the Counties; and well they might, for without doubt they ‘ were moſt commonly the Greateſt Tenants in Capite, under the ‘ Degree of Great Barons in each County, which were choſen by the ‘ Military Tenants, to repreſent the Omnes Alios qui de Rege tene- ‘ bant in Capite, meution'd in King John's Charter, or them and all ‘ other Military Tenants by Mean-Tenure; for 'tis ſcarce to be be‘ lieved, that thoſe Men, the Tenants in Capite, which made ſuch a ‘ Noiſe for their Liberties, would part with this main Point of be‘ing perſonally preſent, or the Body of them Repreſented by ſome ‘ of their own number in every County ; and it may be upon this ‘ Account, they had the Title of Notable Knights, &c. in the an‘tient Writs of Summons directed to the Sheriffs.

I confeſs, that if what the Doctor here lays down were true, it would be a very good reaſon, why the Knights of Shires ſhould be called the Great Men of their Counties, if they had been always, or moſt commonly, choſen from the Tenants in Capite : But here the Doctor qualifies it with moſt commonly ; but how he cou'd prove that, I cannot tell, unleſs he were alive to anſwer for himſelf: but this is certain, from all times beyond Memory, that the Knights of Shires were choſen in the County-Court, to which Court all Freeholders of what Tenure ſoever, whether by Knight's-Service or Soccage, were to appear before the Sheriff once every Month, except Tenants in Antient Demeſne, and the Citizens and Burgeſſes of ſuch Cities and Free-Boroughs as were exempted from Suit and Service to it. And tho' 'tis true, that many of the Tenants in Capite, under the Degree of Barons, being Perſons of great Eſtates and Power in their Country, were oftimes choſen Knights of Shires, yet it does not from thence follow, that the Inferior Tenants, being many of them (as the Doctor himſelf acknowledges) Men of great Eſtates too, (and Bracton calls them Vavaſors, i. e. Perſons of Great Dignity and Power) were not as capable likewiſe of being choſen as any of the Tenants in Capite, and oftentimes were thought more worthy to be elected ; for that ſome of theſe Meſne-Tenants were owners of eight or ten Mannors each, when perhaps ſeveral of the Tenants in Capite, and that in the ſame County too, might not have half a one : So likewiſe Tenants in Soccage, if they had Eſtates that made them capable of being Knighted, might have been choſen Knights of the Shire, ſince the antient Writ for their Election does not reſtrain it to any ſorts of Perſons in particular, for the only Qualification required of them, was, that they ſhould be choſen, (as well as the Citizens and Burgeſſes) de diſcretioribus, & ad laborandum potentioribus, that is, of the moſt diſcreet, and moſt able for Buſineſs.

No more is it true, what the Doctor ſo boldly aſſerts, that they were choſen by the Military Tenants, to repreſent all thoſe who held of the King in Capite ; and tho' he qualifies this by adding All Other Military Tenants by Mean-Tenure, yet this was not true neither ; for the Knights of the Shires being choſen by all the Suitors to the County-Court, whether they were Tenants by Soccage or Military Service, muſt repreſent them all alike, ſince they had equal Votes at their Election ; but the Doctor is ſo fond of this Notion, that he is very loth to part with it, and will have it ſcarcely probable, that the Tenants in Capite ſhou'd not be perſonally preſent, or the Body of them repreſented by ſome of their own number in every County ; ſo that if this were true, theſe Tenants in Capite were not only moſt commonly, but conſtantly choſen Knights of Shires. But I can ſee no reaſon for this, unleſs the Doctor had proved, that one of the Liberties of theſe Tenants in Capite, was, to be the ſole Law- makers and Tax-granters for the whole Kingdom; and then indeed nothing could be more Abſolute than they, if that cou'd be made out from the Record which the Doctor hath cited of the Seventh of Henry the Third, that they cou'd have laid a Pole-Tax not only upon themſelves, but upon All the Inhabitants of the Kingdom, whether they held of them or not, and eſpecially upon the Cities and Boroughs, many of which (as the Doctor too himſelf owns) held of the King in Capite, and conſequently ought not to be taxed, but by Repreſentatives of their own choice.

And beſides, if this Power of Law-making and giving Taxes was ſo great and incommunicable a Priviledge, it ſeems ſtrange to me, how theſe Tenants in Capite came ever to looſe it; for in all the Records of Parliament and Hiſtories that I have met with, I cou'd never find, that they were any more capable of being choſen Members of Parliament, than thoſe that held of other Lords beſides the King, and that in the Reign of Richard the Second, which was ſcarce an hundred Years from the Eighteenth of Edward the Firſt, when the Doctor ſuppoſes Knights of Shires were firſt ſetled in Parliament, we have Sir Geoffry Chaucer's Teſtimony, that Inferior or Meſne-Tenants were choſen Knights of the Shire; for in his Prologues to his Tales, after he has deſcribed the rich Franklyn, or Meſne-Tenant, he ſays, full often was he Knight of the Shire; and concludes thus of him, no where was there a more worthy Vavaſor, which every one, that knows the Meaning of that Word, can tell, that it ſignified then (as well as in Bracton's time) an Inferior Tenant to ſome other Lord. I ſhould not have dwelt ſo long upon this Subject, had not the Doctor made it one of his darling Notions, and repeated it more than once in his Anſwers to Mr. Petyt and Mr. Atwood, and that he builds ſo much upon it, as to make none capable to be reckon'd among the Magnates Regni, but Peers and Great Tenants in Capite, who alone (as he ſuppoſes) conſtituted the Politick Body of the whole Kingdom in Parliament.

And ſince I have here laid before you what Records I can find, to prove, that the Council of Tenants in Capite was not the ſole Great Council of the Kingdom, I ſhall in the next place proceed to the Hiſtorical part, and ſhew from our antient Hiſtories, that there was a manifeſt Diſtinction between That and the Common Council of the whole Kingdom; and firſt I'll begin with the * Engliſh-Saxon Annals, where under An. Dom. 1085. (being the laſt Year of William the Firſt) there is a remarkable Paſſage, which I ſhall here give you in Engliſh: At Chriſtmas the King (viz. William I.) was at Gloceſter, with his Nobles, and there held his Curia or Court (in Saxon his Hired) five days; and preſently after this He held a Great Council (in Saxon, Mycel-Getheat) where He had many large Diſcourſes with the Nobles, &c. Now it ſeems plain to me, that this Ordinary Court (here called his Hired) could not be the Great Council of the Kingdom; for to what purpoſe ſhou'd it meet again ſo quickly, if it had been the Common Council of the whole Kingdom? Or, why are they here called by different Titles, the one is Hired or Court, and the other the Mycel-Getheat the Great Council; cil ; which is alſo called Commune Concilium totius Regni in † Sir Henry Spelman's Councils in this very Year?

And to ſhew you more plainly the Difference, between this Great Council of the whole Kingdom, and the leſs of the King's Barons and Tenants in Capite, ſee * Eadmerus, who, relating what was done in a Great Council held at Eaſter, immediately before the Invaſion of Robert Duke of Normandy, in the Second Year of Henry the Firſt, ſays, there met in Council Tota Angliæ Nobilitas, cum Populi numeroſitate ; and then Archbiſhop Anſelm engag'd for the King, that He ſhould govern the Kingdom according to the juſt Laws thereof ; where you ſee, that beſides the Noblemen, called, Regni Nobilitas ; there was alſo a great number of the Commons here termed in the barbarous Latin of that Age, Populi numeroſitas.

But when the King held his Curia of the Great Lords and Tenants in Capite Alone, the Expreſſions are more particular, as may appear by many Charters of our firſt Norman Kings to ſeveral Abbeys of their own Foundation, which are ſaid to be made Conſilio, & Aſſenſu Baronum noſtrorum tàm Preſulum, quàm Laicorum, as you will (for Example) find it in the Charter of Henry the Firſt, to the Abbey of Abingdon, as it is exemplified in the Antient Manuſcript Regiſter of that Abbey now in the Cottonian Library ; in which Book you will find more of the like nature, that plainly make out this difference between the leſs Council of the King's Barons, and Tenants in Capite, and the Great Council of the Kingdom.

But that before the Knights of Shires were ſuppoſed to have been ſummon'd to Great Councils or Parliaments, there were other Inferior Tenants (who were not Tenants in Capite) that were Members of that Council, appears likewiſe from Eadmerus, who reciting the Letters which the Prior and Convent of Canterbury wrote to the Pope, to juſtify the Election of Ralph, Biſhop of Rocheſter, to the See of Canterbury, they ſay it was made Adunato Conventu totius Angliæ, that is, in the united Aſſembly of all England, viz. the Epiſcopi, Abbates, & Principes Regni, & ingens populi Multitudo, that is, the Biſhops, Abbots, and Chief Men of the Kingdom, with a great Multitude of People, were preſent there; and that by this Expreſſion is not to be underſtood the Mobb or Ordinary People, that thruſt in only to Gaze, appears by * Gervaſe of Canterbury's relation of a like Election of Archbiſhop Lanfranc in the Time of William the Firſt ; the Paſſage in Latin is thus, Anno quarto Regis Wilielmi I. Anno Dom. 1070, Lanfrancus Cadomenſis Abbas electus fuit, Archiepiſcopus Cantuarienſis, à Senioribus ejuſdem Eccleſiæ cum Epiſcopis & Principibus, Clero & Populo Angliæ in Curia Regis in Aſſumptione Sanctæ Mariæ ; i. e. Lanfranc, Abbot of Caen was elected Archbiſhop of Canterbury by the Elders of that Church, together with the Biſhops and Chief Men, the Clergy and People of England, at the Aſſumption of the Bleſſed Virgin Mary : which words Clergy and People, put after the Biſhops and Chief Men, muſt ſignify the Inferior Clergy and Perſons of a Lower Rank than the Barons and Tenants in Capite, and cannot be here render'd as (I own) it may in other places, Clergy and Laiety ; for then if the words Epiſcopi and Principes, had included all, both of the Eccleſiaſtical and Secular Orders at this Council, the following words Clerus and Populus lus would be wholly impertinent, and ſignify nothing; and this Interpretation is alſo confirm'd by the Teſtimony of an Anonimous Author who wrote in the Time of Henry the Firſt, and relates this Election of Archbiſhop Lanfranc to have been made Communi Conſenſu & Conſilio omnium Baronum, omniumquè Epiſcoporum, & Abbatum, totiuſquè Populi, i. e. by the common Conſent and Advice of all his (viz. the King's) Barons, and of all the Biſhops, Abbots, and the whole People of England: By which laſt words, ſince they cannot be underſtood literally that all the People appear'd there in Perſon, it muſt be intended that they gave their Conſents by their Repreſentatives in a joint Aſſembly or Council of the Barons, and other Inferior Tenants; and that ſuch united Aſſemblies were then frequent, you may ſee in Hoveden, who, under Anno 1121 (being the eighteenth of Henry the Firſt) relates the King's Marriage with the Lady Adeliza, Daughter to the Duke of Lovain, to have been celebrated at Windſor, Adunato Concilio totius Regni, i. e. by the united Council of the whole Kingdom. And * Simeon of Durham ſpeaking of the ſame Council, doth it in the ſame words.

* Coll. 243.

But I am ſenſible there may be objected againſt this Interpretation, that Paſſage in * Eadmerus, adunatis (without mentioning either Præcepto or Sanctione Regis) ad Curiam ejus in Paſcha, Terræ Principibus, i. e. all the Chief Men of the Nation being aſſembled at his Court at Eaſter, where it may be thought that this was only a Court held ex more, without any ſummons; and that there is no inferring from thoſe Expreſſions, Rex aſcivit, or adunavit Concilium, that there were then two different ſorts of Councils, ſince the words ſignifie no more than in general, that the King then aſſembled his Great Council of the whole Kingdom, conſiſting only of Tenants in Capite. To this it may be reply'd, that ſince this word adunavit does properly ſignifie to unite or join together two different things, it muſt needs have that ſignification in this Author; for if he had meant only to call or aſſemble a Council, there are much more proper words for that purpoſe; and tho' this Court was held at Eaſter, one of the uſual times appointed for the ordinary Curia, yet it doth not therefore make it the more unlikely, that Others, beſides the Tenants in Capite might be preſent at it, becauſe I have already ſaid, that for the conveniency of the Great Lords, and ſuch Tenants, the King might unite the Repreſentatives of the Commons to them, for the diſpatch of ſome more great and weighty Affair, in which He would have the conſent of the whole Nation; and notwithſtanding this Author hath omitted the ſummoning of this Council to have been by the King's Writ or Precept, yet ſuch a Writ might be iſſued, for all he takes no notice of it; and he hath alſo omitted the uſual words ex more, which he always uſes when ſuch Councils were only held according to the common Uſage or Cuſtom.

* F. 90.

I ſhall now proceed to the Reign of King Stephen, whom Richard of Hagulſtald relates to have been elected, à Primoribus Regni, cùm favore Cleri & Populi, Clericorum & Laicorum Univerſitate, ab Omnibus, viz. tàm Preſulibus quàm Comitibus & Baronibus, that is, by the Chief Men of the Kingdom, with the Good-will of the Clergy and People, and by the Univerſity or Common Body of the Clercs and Laics (to wit) by all the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons; under under which laſt word may very well be comprehended, not only the Great Barons and Tenants in Capite, but alſo the Inferior Barons and Lords of Mannors, as I have already proved. And the ſame Author further tells us, in the beginning of his Reign, that being now ſettled in the Kingdom, He, by his Royal Edict, commanded the Biſhops and Great Men to Aſſemble, with whom He held a General Council of the Kingdom; and that by the word Proceres not only the Great Lords and Tenants in Capite may be underſtood, but alſo the Repreſentatives of the Commons, I have already proved from divers Authors who comprehend them under that Title.

As for the long Reign of Henry the Second, tho' the Authors are very general in their Expreſſions of the Conſtituent Members of the Councils held in his time, yet we may produce divers Teſtimonies from them, to prove, that the General Councils of the Kingdom conſiſted of more Members than the Tenants in Capite Alone; and that by the word Proceres mention'd after the Barones to be preſent in the Council of Clarendon, and before whom the Conſtitutions there made were allow'd and recogniz'd, not only the Tenants in Capite, but other Inferior Tenants are to be underſtood, may appear in * Fitz Stephen's Life of Thomas Becket, where, upon his Tryal, and the Biſhops withdrawing from giving Judgment upon him, the Author thus proceeds, Evocantur quidam Vicecomites & ſecundæ dignitatis Barones, antiqui dierum, ut addantur eis, & adſint Judicio, i. e. there were thereupon call'd up (viz. to ſupply the places of the abſent Biſhops) certain Sheriffs and Barons of the Second Order, that they ſhould be added to them, and preſent at this Judgment. Now that by theſe Perſons here mention'd, not any Tenants in Capite, but certain Perſons of an Inferior Dignity are to be underſtood, appears by one of the Conſtitutions of this Council, wherein it is expreſly provided, that Archiepiſcopi, Epiſcopi, &c. & Univerſæ Perſonæ Regni qui de Rege tenent in Capite, habeant poſſeſſiones ſuas de Domino Rege, ſicut Baroniam, &c. & ſicut Barones cæteri debent intereſſe Judiciis Curiæ Regis cum Baronibus, &c. i. e. the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, &c. and all Perſons of the Kingdom who hold of the King in Capite hold their Eſtates of our Lord the King, as a Barony, &c. and as other Barons ought to be preſent in Judgments of the King's Court with the Barons; whence it evidently appears, that all the leſs Tenants in Capite being already preſent at this Tryal of Thomas Becket, theſe Sheriffs and Barons of the Second Order, who were call'd in upon the departure of the Biſhops, muſt have been inferior Tenants, or Barons of the Counties, and were the ſame, or very like our Knights of Shires, and they muſt have been ſummon'd to this Council, at the beginning of it, becauſe otherwiſe they could not have been call'd up, upon the going out of the Biſhops to ſupply their places.

I ſhall but barely mention the next General Council held by this King at Gaitington, which (as Hoveden relates) beſides the Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, and Barons, conſiſted of many Others, as well Clercs as Laymen; and by theſe Multi Alii are to be underſtood the ſame Perſons as are mention'd in the Preamble to the Statute of Merton, which is ſaid to be made, as well by the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, quàm ab Ipſo Rege & Aliis, as by the King Himſelf and Others: By which laſt words coming after the Barons, are meant the Repreſentatives of the Commons.

I confeſs the Reign of Richard the Firſt doth not afford us many Inſtances of theſe ſeparate or diſtinct Councils, yet one or two I have given you, and ſhall here barely mention the latter of them from Hoveden, who recites the Aſſiſe or Laws concerning Foreſts, to be made by the King with the Conſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Earls, Barons, & Militum, i. e. of the Knights, or Men at leaſt that held by Military Service of other Lords.

The Reign of King John, tho' it was not long, yet will afford us ſome Evidences of theſe two diſtinct Councils, and I ſhall here mind you of what I have already ſaid in the former part of this Diſcourſe concerning that Charter, whereby the King ſettles a Jointure on his Second Wife Queen Iſabel, who in the beginning of it is ſaid to be crown'd Queen by the common Aſſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and Clergy, and People of the Land, that is, in a Great Council, conſiſting of theſe ſeveral Orders or Eſtates; and I ſuppoſe He was elected and crown'd by a Council conſiſting of the ſame Members, tho' the Authors that write of it are not ſo expreſs in this Relation. Yet however it is ſufficiently hinted by * Matt. Paris in his Account of this King's Coronation, at which, he ſays, there aſſembl'd at London, 'the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earls, and 'Barons, and All Others that ought to be preſent at it; and then 'Hubert, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, ſtanding in the middle of them 'All made a Speech to them, and perſwaded them to elect John, 'Duke of Normandy, King, as they did, and ſo He was crown'd by that Archbiſhop; by which words, and All Others who ought to be preſent at his Coronation, may very well be underſtood the Repreſentatives of the Commons. But * Dr. Brady will by no means allow of this Interpretation; for he ſays, 'He was ſet up and crown'd by Archbiſhop Hubert and his Faction, Arthur Duke of Britain, Son of 'Geofry his elder Brother, being the right Heir: But here is not the 'leaſt mention of a Great Council, or the Commons, unleſs it be ſaid 'this Convention be one, as moſt certainly it was not: Here were 'the Biſhops and Temporal Lords only preſent, and Actors in this 'Tranſaction, there might be a great many of the Commons Spectators at this Solemnity, but the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, were 'they who acted and contrived the crowning and making of Him King.

Tho' the Doctor hath put what he ſays concerning Earl John's being crown'd King by the Archbiſhop and his Faction in a black Letter, that it might be the more taken notice of, yet he cites no Author for it. R. Hoveden, and all the reſt of the Hiſtorians, unanimouſly agree with what is ſet forth in a Charter of this King's, that He was crown'd tam Cleri, quàm Populi unanimi Conſenſu & Favore, by the unanimous Conſent of the Clergy and People, by which Expreſſion cannot be underſtood (as the Doctor would have it) only a Faction of the Earls and Barons, but the Repreſentatives of the whole People or Nation: And I have not yet found, that the Doctor, with all his Learning, from any Record or Hiſtory, can ſhew us, that by the word Populus is to be underſtood the Great Barons only; for it ſeems the leſs Tenants in Capite are now quite left out of this Account. But that the Repreſentatives of the Commons were not admitted only as Spectators of this Aſſembly, appears by theſe Words of the Author's immediately after Baronibus, atque aliis Omnibus qui ejus Coronationi intereſſe debuerunt; which would not have been expreſſed, had not there been Others beſides the Earls and Barons, who could claim a Right to be preſent at his Coronation, and at his Election too. In the 6th Year of his Reign King John ſummon'd a great Council of the Kingdom, as appears by a * Writ on the Clauſe Rolls, whereby He call'd them to treat with Him of arduous Affairs for the common Utility of the Kingdom, and therefore it was neceſſary to have the Advice of the Magnatum, the Great Men of the Kingdom, upon thoſe matters, which had been ſent Him by his Ambaſſadors from the King of France. And that by the Word Magnatum, the Knights of Shires may be included, I have ſufficiently proved already.

* Rot. Clauſ. 6 Johan. m. 3.

Roger Hoveden ſays, under the Year 1207, (being the 8th Year of this King) that He kept his Chriſtmas Court at Wincheſter, the Great Men of the Kingdom being preſent; this was certainly a Court of the Tenants in Capite held ex more, according to Cuſtom; for it immediately follows in the ſame Author, that at Candlemas He took a Thirteenth part of the Moveable Goods of the Laicks, as alſo of the Eccleſiaſticks and Prelates, who for all they murmur'd againſt it, durſt not contradict it; but tho' this was given grudgingly, yet it was not as Dr. Brady in his Hiſtory would have it, only impos'd upon the Kingdom by the King's Council at Oxford, but what was really granted by a Common Council of the whole Kingdom; but ſince he grounds this Opinion upon a † Record of this King, wherein this Tax is ſaid to be granted by the Advice and Aſſent of his Council at Oxon, I will ſhew that the Annals of Waverly under this Year do very well explain this Expreſſion, and therefore I ſhall give you their Relation of this Tranſaction.

† Pat. 8, 9. Johan. m. 3. Dorſ. n. 83.

Ad An. 1205

'That King John, after his Return from beyond Sea, having ſummon'd the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and Great Men of the Kingdom, eight days after New-years-tide, to a Council at 'London; He there moved the Biſhops and Abbots, that they would 'permit the Parſons and Beneficed Clerks of Churches, to give Him 'a certain Sum out of their yearly Revenues; which when the 'Prelates would by no means agree to, it was deferr'd to the next 'Common Council, which was to be held at Oxford, on the Octaves 'of the Purification of our Lady; when a great Multitude of the 'Prelates, and Great Men of the Kingdom being aſſembled, the 'King again required of the Biſhops and Abbots, what He had demanded of them before; but they all, both of Canterbury and 'York, taking Council together, unanimouſly anſwer'd, That the Church of England could no ways bear ſuch a Burthen, as had never been heard of in all former Ages; then the King taking better Advice, wholly releas'd that Demand to them; yet afterwards it was ordain'd by the whole Kingdom, that all Men in general, by whatſoever Tenure they held, ſhould ſwear to the value both of their real and perſonal Eſtates, and ſhould pay a Thirteenth part thereof to the King for the Recovery of his Inheritance in Normandy, and his other Dominions in France.

From this Author's Relation, we may draw theſe Obſervations, that notwithſtanding the King's holding his Court or Council with his Great Men at Chriſtmas, (as * Matt. Paris relates) yet within little more than a Fortnight after, He ſummon'd all the Perſons there mention'd to a Great Council at London; but not obtaining his Deſire from the Clergy, He held another Council at Oxon at Candlemas following, for the ſame purpoſe. Now if the Magnates or Great Men (that is, all the Tenants in Capite, both Great and Small) had then made the Common Council of the whole Kingdom, what need King John to have ſummon'd another Great Council at London ſo ſoon after? ſince He might as well have propos'd the Buſineſs to the Biſhops, Abbots, and Priors, who held in Capite, as alſo to the Lay-Nobility that held by the ſame Tenure, without troubling them to meet again in ſo ſhort a time: But if the Doctor's Friends ſhall in anſwer to this, alledge, that the King took this courſe, becauſe He was reſolved to have the Reſolutions not only of the Biſhops, Abbots, and Priors, who held in Capite, but alſo of all other Prelates, whether they ſo held or not, ſince it was from them chiefly, that He now demanded an Aid, and that therefore it was neceſſary to ſummon them to another Council, becauſe they were not obliged to appear at that which had been lately held at Chriſtmas, ex more: I grant this may ſeem a plauſible Anſwer, but upon Examination it will not do the Buſineſs; for had this Demand only concern'd thoſe Prelates, the King needed to have ſummon'd no more than thoſe to a Council or Synod of both Provinces, wherein He might have received their Anſwer; whereas we find the Earls, Barons, and other Great Men ſummon'd to this Common Council, which muſt have been to give Him their Aſſiſtance and Advice in this great Neceſſity he then lay under; and that this Tax was intended to be general, upon the Laity as well as the Clergy, appears by what follows in this Relation, that all Men whatſoever ſhould pay the Thirteenth part of their real and perſonal Eſtates to the King, for the Recovery of his loſt Dominions, which being a Tax upon all Perſonal as well as Real Eſtates could not be granted by the Tenants in Capite alone; and therefore by the ſame reaſon that all the Abbots and Priors of the Kingdom were ſummon'd to both theſe Councils at London and Oxford, as well thoſe that did not hold in Capite, as thoſe that did, it will follow, that the Lay-Members muſt likewiſe have conſiſted of Others, than only Tenants in Capite. Dr. Brady (for what reaſon I know not) has not thought fit to give any Anſwer to this Citation from Matt. Paris, in his Animadverſions upon * Mr. Atwood's Jani Anglorum, &c. who there makes uſe of it; yet (as I ſuppoſe) the Doctor fancied it made for him, and that this Tax was levyed by the King's ſole Authority, as appears by what he ſays in the ſame Treatiſe, from † Matt. Paris, that King John took a Seventh part of all Moveables without Common Aſſent; and another time a Thirteenth, the Great Men and Clergy grumbling at it. This laſt, by the Quotation in the Margin, muſt refer to this very Tax, which he ſuppoſes the King to have levyed by his ſole Prerogative, from the general Words of his Author, that the King then took a Thirteenth part of all Men's Moveables throughout England, which could not have been well confuted, but by this Teſtimony of the Annals of Waverly I have now produced:

produced; and which indeed may teach Writers of Hiſtory, not to be too poſitive in their Relations or Inferences from any one ſingle Author, for the eſtabliſhing of any particular Notion or Opinion of their own, without firſt conſulting all other Hiſtorians and Writers concerning that matter. But as I have given you the beſt Objection, I cou'd think of, in anſwer to the Conſequences I have drawn from the Authorities now cited, ſo if the Doctor's Friends, who may peruſe theſe Sheets, ſhall think it worth their while to make any others more ſatisfactory, I ſhall be very glad to be better inform'd.

In the Fifteenth Year of this King, the Civil War with his Barons being now begun, He ſummon'd a Great Council to be held at Oxford, the * Writs for which † Mr. Selden hath given us, and ſays, that, for all he hath ſeen, it is without Example. I ſhall make bold to give it you in Engliſh. The King to the Sheriff of Oxfordſhire, greeting, We command thee, that thou cauſe to come to Us all ſuch Knights of thy Baylywick, with their Arms, who were ſummon'd to appear before Us fifteen days after All-Souls; but as for the Barons, thou ſhalt cauſe each of them to come without Arms; alſo thou ſhalt cauſe to come to Us four diſcreet Knights of thy County, at the ſame time, to ſpeak with Us concerning our Affairs: This bears Date the 11th of November: Then follows thus, In the ſame manner it is written to all other Sheriffs; which ſhews that it was a General Summons to a Council of the whole Kingdom. But the right underſtanding of this Writ I grant is ſomewhat difficult, for if by Omnes Milites, all Knights mention'd in the beginning of it, are to be underſtood (as * Dr. Brady does) the leſs Tenants in Capite, who were to come with their Arms, I cannot ſee any reaſon, why, if by the next Word Barones, the Great Barons are to be underſtood, they ſhou'd contrary to their Tenures be order'd to come without Arms, whilſt the Inferior Tenants in Capite were to have their Swords in their hands. But this I think is plain enough, that by the four Diſcreet Knights, who were likewiſe to come thither, (but whether with or without Arms, is not ſaid) muſt be meant four Knights choſen by each Shire, which certainly could not be Tenants in Capite, ſince they were already ſummon'd in the beginning of this Writ to come thither, armed; and therefore the only ſenſe I can make of this Record, is, that whether by the Word Barones, are to be underſtood the Barons properly ſo-call'd, or the Barons of the Counties which I have already mention'd, does not fully appear, yet hereby is plainly intended a Common Council of the Kingdom, which was to conſiſt of the Repreſentatives of the Commons, beſides the Great Barons and Tenants in Capite.

And to prove further, that a Common Council of ſuch, both Great and Small, could not repreſent or oblige the whole Kingdom or Nation, appears by that Council of them alone, which was held by King John for the Confirmation of that Charter, whereby he ſurrender'd his Kingdom to the Pope, at the Concluſion of which it is recited to be made per Commune Concilium Baronum ſuorum, by the Common Council of his Barons.

* Dr. Brady cannot deny the Concluſion to this Charter, which he ſays was executed in the Houſe of the Templars near Dover, in the preſence of two Biſhops, the Chief Juſticiary, ſeven Earls, and three Barons, with divers Others, without ſubjoining any other Note of that there were more preſent; and then he proceeds to this effect, that King John having rais'd an Army to oppoſe the King of France, if He ſhould land, his Tenants in Capite, with others only met there upon that Account; and therefore he will have this to be no more than a Military Summons for their muſtering and appearance with Horſe and Arms at Dover, the place appointed for the Rendezvous; ſo that this Aſſembly being only an Army, and the five proſcrib'd Biſhops being in France, and the Barons that ſided with them fled beyond Sea, or not daring to appear; and further, the Reſignation being executed before ſo ſmall a number of Barons, without any probability of more being then preſent, this could not be ſuch a Council as was conſtituted by King John's Charter; that is, it was not a Parliamentary Council, Colloquium, or General Repreſentative of the Nation; and therefore the Parliament in the Fortieth of Edward the Third might well ſay, this Reſignation was made without their Aſſent.

But for all the Doctor's Evaſions, I do not doubt, but to prove, that this Aſſembly was truly a Common Council of Tenants in Capite, conſiſting of the ſame Members as that which was afterwards agreed to by King's John Charter, for * Matt. Paris thus relates the manner of raiſing of this Army; that the King having a little before ſummon'd all the Earls, Barons, Knights and Freemen of the Kingdom whatſoever, and of whomſoever they held, to appear in Arms, theſe made ſo vaſt an Army, that after all the ordinary Rabble were ſent home, the ſame Author tells us, the Knights, Eſquires, and Freemen, that ſtaid behind, made about ſixty thouſand Men, who were encamped at Barham-Down, not far from Dover, where this Reſignation was executed: So that this being almoſt as great a Meeting as that at Runne-Mead, the King might very well make out of theſe a full Council of Tenants in Capite to join in this Reſignation; and that He did ſo, the Concluſion to this Charter ſays expreſly, which had it been otherwiſe, might eaſily have been diſprov'd by the Pope's Legate as a notorious Falſhood; and tho' the King ſummon'd them at firſt, only upon a Military Account, yet He might very well make uſe of them afterwards for another purpoſe, eſpecially ſince the time appointing their Summons, no more than the Cauſe of it, was not yet ſetled by this Great Charter. And as for the ſmall number of Barons and Biſhops, which (the Doctor ſays) were preſent at this Meeting, it does not follow, that becauſe no more are expreſſed as Witneſſes to this Charter, therefore there were no more preſent; for tho' the Words cum multis aliis are omitted, yet that might only be thro' the Haſt or Forgetfulneſs of the Clerk that wrote it. And ſuppoſe five of the Biſhops were now fled into France, it is however very likely, that All, or the Greateſt part of thoſe that ſtaid behind, were preſent at this Council, ſince moſt of them (except two or three who had join'd highly with the King) were very deſirous that He ſhou'd agree with the Pope upon any Terms, as were likewiſe moſt of the Earls and Barons, whom the King durſt not confide in, becauſe He believ'd them more inclinable to the Pope and the French King, than to his own Intereſt;

Intereſt; therefore it is no wonder if He ſtruck up this Agreement with the Legate as ſoon as He cou'd; ſo that the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite there preſent, might very well be Witneſſes and give their Conſents to it before they return'd home. And tho' the Words pro ſe & Communitate Regni are not expreſs'd in the Concluſion of this Charter of Reſignation, yet this is no ſufficient Argument againſt the Validity of it; the Words Communitas Regni, not being to be found in any Charter or Record before the Reign of Henry the Third: And therefore this Inſtrument might very well be made in ſuch a Great Council of Tenants in Capite, as was thought ſufficient at that time for the Purpoſes therein mention'd.

Not long after this Aſſembly of the Tenants in Capite, the Wars between the King and the Barons unhappily broke out, which produc'd that Great Aſſembly of the whole Nation at Runne-Mead, and this I have proved in the former part of this Diſcourſe to be a Common Council of the whole Kingdom; and therefore I ſhall not repeat what I have already ſaid upon that Subject.

I come now to the Reign of Henry the Third, but of which I have ſaid ſo much already both from Records and Hiſtory, to prove, that the Commons were preſent in ſeveral Common Councils or Parliaments of his Reign, that it is needleſs to repeat them; yet I ſhall add one Inſtance more from Matt. Paris, to ſhew, that the Tenants in Capite did not then conſtitute the whole Community or Body of the Kingdom in Parliament, and it ſhall be one of thoſe Inſtances that Doctor B. himſelf hath made uſe of from the ſame * Author, who relates under A. D. 1237, that that Year the King kept his Chriſtmas-Curia or Court at Wincheſter, from whence He ſent out his Writs, commanding all that belong'd to the Kingdom or Government, namely, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots inſtall'd, Priors, Earls and Barons, that without fail they ſhou'd meet at London on the Octaves of Epiphany, which they did accordingly, and on St. Hillary's day the whole Body of the Nobility met at London; and in this Council we find, after ſome difficulty, a Thirtieth part of all Moveable Goods were given to the King. Now if the Great Barons and Tenants in Capite Alone made up at that time the Great Council of the Kingdom, why could they not, when they met the King at Chriſtmas, ex more, have granted Him this Tax, without putting Him to the trouble of Summoning, and themſelves of appearing again in ſo ſhort a time as between Chriſtmas and St. Hillary's day, which is the 13*th* of January? beſides which, the manner of raiſing this Tax, being upon the Moveable Goods of the whole Nation, ſufficiently ſhews it could not be the ſole Grant of the Tenants in Capite.

* P. 434, 435.

I am now come to the laſt Period of my intended Deſign, which is to ſet down and fairly weigh and conſider the Doctor's Arguments, whereby he undertakes to prove, that after the 49th of Henry the Third, to the 18th of Edward the Firſt, the Knights of Shires were never ſummon'd to appear again in any Parliament of thoſe Reigns; but ſince the Doctor hath taken ſo much Pains to give a long Relation of the Civil Wars between King Henry the Third and his Rebellious Barons, who were headed by Simon Montfort, I ſhall in the firſt place, as an Introduction to what follows, give you his Account of this Great Alteration in the Government, by bringing the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes to be Members of Parliament, which being begun by the Rebellion of Simon Montfort and his Faction, the King not thinking it ſafe for his Intereſt to follow that Example, is by the Doctor ſuppos'd after the Battel of Eveſham to have again ſummon'd what Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite He pleas'd, to all other Parliaments, that were held during the reſt of his Reign, which was imitated by his Son King Edward the Firſt, till the 18th Year of his Reign, when upon ſome unknown Conſiderations, He thought fit, firſt to introduce the Knights of Shires, and then about five Years after, viz. in his Twenty third Year, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes, as Conſtituent Members of Parliament.

Having thus given you in ſhort the Summ of Dr. Brady's Notions concerning theſe matters; I ſhall now proceed to lay before you a brief Hiſtory (from the Doctor's Anſwer to Mr. Petyt) of this Great Tranſaction between King Henry and his Barons, which is to this effect; † 'that after Simon Montfort and the reſt of the Barons of his Faction had taken King Henry the Third, and Richard Earl of Cornwal, the King's Brother, together with the Princes their Sons, and ſeveral other of the Nobility, Priſoners at the Battle of Lewes, he carried them about with him, till they had taken in all the ſtrong Forts and Caſtles of the Land; and when this was done, Matt. Paris tells us, that calling together the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons of that Faction, which ſo ſeditiouſly held their King Priſoner, they began to ſet up a Committee for the Government of the Kingdom, conſiſting of twelve Lords, who were choſen out of the whole Community or Body of the Baronage, without whoſe Advice and Conſent, or at leaſt of three of them, no Affairs in the King's Houſhold, nor of the Kingdom, ſhould be tranſacted; and to theſe Ordinances the King and his Son were forced to agree; and the Record of this Agreement recites, that this Ordinance was made at London, by the Conſent, Good-liking, and Command of the King, and alſo of the Prelates, Barons, and of the whole Community there preſent; and the Doctor hath already undertaken to prove from the * Record cited in the Margin, that by the word Communitas there mention'd, is to be underſtood not the Commons, but the Community of the whole Kingdom repreſented by the Biſhops, Lords, and Tenants in Capite, and that the Agreement between the King and them is only ſign'd by ſome Earls and Barons, and no Commoner Witneſs to it, except the Mayor of London, whom he ſuppoſes to have been no Member of Parliament.

After this, Simon Montfort, the better to ſettle himſelf in his uſurp'd Power, and in thoſe Lands and Caſtles, which himſelf, and thoſe of his Faction had unjuſtly wreſted from Prince Edward, who was ſtill a Priſoner, having deliver'd himſelf as a Hoſtage for the performance of this forced Peace; they in the firſt place ſent out Writs in the King's Name unto divers Biſhops, Abbots, and Priors, and to ſuch of the Noblemen as were of their own Party, to appear at Weſtminſter on the Octaves of St. Hillary next enſuing; and the * Doctor hath given us a Copy of the Writ of Summons to the Biſhop of Durham, as it is found in the † Cloſe-Rolls of the Forty ninth of this King, at the end whereof it is thus recited, Eodem modo Mandatum eſt Epiſcopo Carleol; as alſo to divers Biſhops and Abbots, all of their own Party and Faction, there being above an hundred Abbots and Priors then ſummon'd (more than ever were, I believe, before or ſince) and then follows a ſhort Writ to the Sheriffs of Counties, to ſummon two Knights de Legalioribus & Diſcretioribus ſingulorum Comitatuum, tho' it doth not appear by that Writ, whether the Sheriffs of the Counties were to elect and ſend theſe Knights, the Sheriffs being then of their Faction, and made by them, for 'tis there ſaid only, quod convenire faciant: There are alſo other Writs recited to have been directed to all the Great Cities and Towns of England, as alſo to the Cinque-Ports, to ſend two of the moſt legal and diſcreet Perſons of each of the ſaid Cities, Boroughs, Towns, and Cinque-Ports, to the ſaid Parliament at Weſtminſter, at the time aforeſaid; ſo that without the Hiſtory of this very nick of time, theſe Writs (which are ſaid to be for the delivery of the Prince out of Priſon, and for the ſettling of Tranquility and Peace in the Nation) cannot be well underſtood.

* B. A. P. p. 137.
† Rot. Clauſ. 49 H. 3 M. 11 Dorſo in Schedula

But Prince Edward's Releaſe could not be agreed upon in this Parliament, whatever other buſineſs might be diſpatched; ſo that things ſtill remain'd in this uncertain Condition (the King being all this while a meer Cypher) until ſuch time as Simon Montfort, and Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloceſter, falling out, the latter at laſt took up Arms, and joining with the Earls of Surrey and Pembroke, to whom alſo Prince Edward came, after he had made his Eſcape from Hereford; they altogether raiſed conſiderable Forces againſt Montford, who meeting them, and joining Battel near Eveſham, Montfort, with one of his Sons, and many other Lords and Knights, were ſlain, and all his Party routed.

Compleat Hiſt. pag. 649.

And the Doctor gives us a ſpecious Reaſon, why we can find but Three and twenty Barons enter'd upon the Roll of this Year, of that great number there was then of them, and only thirteen Biſhops that appear'd in this Parliament, and yet at the ſame time that there ſhould be ſummon'd above an hundred Abbots and Priors, and but five Deans of Cathedral Churches; and this the Doctor ſuppoſes to have proceeded from the danger that Simon Montfort and his Privados apprehended from the too great Concourſe of the Nobility, and their great Retinues; and the Example of his own and the Baron's Practices at Oxford in the Parliament of the Twenty ſecond of Henry the Third, might be the cauſe why they alter'd the antient Uſage, and now to ſend out Writs, commanding the Sheriffs of each County to return two Knights; and alſo the Cities and Boroughs, to chuſe two Citizens and Burgeſſes reſpectively: But the reaſon why there were ſo many Abbots and Priors ſummon'd, was becauſe Simon Montfort thought himſelf ſure of them; for he was a mighty Zealot, and a Godly Man in thoſe Times, and a great Minion of theſe Religious Men (as then call'd) as alſo of the Biſhops and Clergy, and they were at leaſt ſeemingly great Favourites of his.

Ib. p. 143.
Ib. 139.

I have been the larger in giving you this Account from the Doctor's own Treatiſe, that you may ſee the moſt he thought could be ſaid for this Opinion, which ſeems to me, however, not at all ſatisfactory; for tho' I confeſs there is ſome colour of Reaſon, why Simon Montfort ſhould ſummon ſo many Abbots and Priors to this Parliament, becauſe he is ſuppoſed to have been ſure of their Votes before-hand; yet this is but a bare conjecture; for if he had been ſo ſure of them, there was as much reaſon why he ſhould have ſummon'd them all likewiſe to the Parliament at London, which the Doctor ſays he called the Year before, when with the Conſents of the Biſhops, Barons, and Others, He made the new Ordinances mention'd by the Doctor, but he cannot find in any Hiſtorian or Record, that Montfort then ſummon'd ſo many of them; yet it ſeems pretty ſtrange, that all theſe Abbots, and Priors, and Deans, not a fourth part of whom were Tenants in Capite, ſhould take the trouble to come to this Parliament without any ſcruple, if neither they nor their Predeceſſors had ever been ſummon'd before.

But the Doctor's reaſon why ſo few Earls and Barons ſhould be ſummon'd is much more unlikely; for if the numerous Appearance of the Barons, and their Practices at Oxford, had been like to have fruſtrated Montfort's Deſigns, there had been indeed ſome Reaſon, why he ſhould have done all he could to have hindered their coming to Parliament again; whereas, on the contrary, the major part of the Earls and Barons at the Parliament at Oxford, who came thither with Arms and great Retinues, did come there only to join him, and to force the King to agree to the Proviſions there made; but if the Commons were now ſummon'd (as the Doctor ſuppoſes) to curb the extravagant Power of the Lords and Tenants in Capite, yet it could not be his Intereſt, nor indeed in his Power ſo to do, not the Latter, becauſe the Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite were too numerous to have ſuffer'd ſuch an Affront and Breach upon their antient Rights as this would have been; ſo that he and his Accomplices durſt never have diſpleas'd ſo great and powerful a Body, as they are allow'd to have been, even by Dr. Brady himſelf, and who made ſuch a reſolute oppoſition for their Liberties in King John's Time, or that they would thus tamely have permitted Men wholly of the Sheriff's Choice and Returning, (as the Doctor ſuppoſes) to have thus taken away their Places in Parliament, and made Laws for them, much leſs the Citizens and Burgeſſes, moſt of whom were certainly not Noble by Birth, nor yet held Lands in Capite: Nor could it be for Montfort's Intereſt ſo to do; for the greateſt part of the Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite were on his ſide already; and thus to exclude them, had been the only way to diſoblige and make them leave him, and go over to the King's Party: So that upon the whole Matter, ſuppoſe Montfort to have been ſuch a Knave and Hypocrite as the Doctor wou'd have him, yet certainly he was no Fool, but a cunning Politician, and would never have done ſo ſilly and impolitick a thing as this. Nay, granting all the Abbots and Priors to have been of his ſide (as the Doctor ſuppoſes) they could no way counterballance the prevailing Power of the numerous Tenants in Capite; ſo that whenever the Commons received their firſt Summons to Parliament, it was certainly before the Forty ninth of Henry the Third.

But to unfold the Myſtery the Doctor makes of it, why ſo few Earls and Barons are mention'd in this Record to have been ſummon'd, it was not out of any Jealouſie or Suſpicion that Simon Montfort had of them, who were for the greater part of them his faſt Friends; but out of pure careleſneſs or omiſſion of the Clerks, who, I ſuppoſe, thro' haſt, inadvertency, or multiplicity of other buſineſs omitted to enter the Names of all the reſt of the Earls, Biſhops, and Barons, to whom Writs of Summons were undoubtedly ſent; and that I do not ſpeak this without Book, I appeal to the Record it ſelf, where there is a blank ſpace left unfill'd of five or ſix Inches breadth, which could be left for no other end, than to add the Names of all the reſt of the Earls and Barons, who were certainly ſummon'd to that Parliament, as well as thoſe whoſe Names are there ſet down.

I have now given you the Doctor's Account of the Original of the Houſe of Commons being called to Parliament, and the Reaſons that Simon Montfort had then to do it; and I have alſo added the Objections and Arguments againſt it, which I ſhall leave to the conſideration of the Ingenious and Impartial Reader, who is moſt likely to be in the Right, he or I in this Controverſie.

But ſince beſides the Reaſons and Arguments already given by thoſe of the Doctor's Opinion, they alſo pretend to prove from other Precedents and Authorities, that the Repreſentatives of the Commons were never ſummon'd to Parliament before the Forty ninth of this King's Reign, nor during the reſt of it, becauſe there are no more Writs of Summons to be found on the Cloſe-Rolls of King John and Henry the Third, whereby it might appear, that the Commons were ſummon'd to any other Parliament after this, to the time the Doctor aſſigns.

To this it may be anſwer'd, that this would be indeed a very material Objection, were there any Writs of Summons to be found on thoſe Cloſe-Rolls, to the Biſhops, Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite, during all that time; but ſince there are none ſuch to be found, it is moſt likely, that thoſe Writs (which were without doubt once extant) are all loſt or deſtroy'd; but becauſe the Doctor, in Anſwer to this, has printed ſome few Writs of Summons to certain Biſhops to appear at Great Councils or Parliaments, and therefore ſuppoſes the like Writs ſhould be found on the ſame Rolls to the Commons alſo, had they ever been ſummon'd before the time above-mention'd; therefore I will here recite the Writs themſelves, and ſhall then give you my Obſervations on them.

The firſt Writ the * Doctor hath given us, is on the † Cloſe Roll of the Sixth of King John, directed to the Biſhop of Salisbury, which is needleſs here to be repeated verbatim, only I would obſerve to you the material words of this Writ; where, after the Clauſe of the Summons particularly expreſs'd, it concludes thus, Expedit habere veſtrum Concilium & aliorum Magnatum Terræ noſtræ quos ad diem illum & Locum fecimus convocari. * The ſecond is on the Cloſe-Roll of the Twenty ſixth of Henry the Third, directed to William, Archbiſhop of York, wherein he is likewiſe ſummon'd, ad tractandum Nobiſcum unà cùm cæteris Magnatibus noſtris, quos ſimilitèr fecimus convocari de Arduis Negotiis noſtris ſtatum noſtrum & totius Regni noſtri ſpecialitèr tangentibus; with this Note underneath

Paris* in his Additaments in theſe words, Domino Regi Angliæ Regina, & Ricardus Comes Cornubiæ ſalutem; recepimus Literas veſtras ad natale Domini proxime præteritum quod in Craſtino Sancti Hilarii Convocaremus Archiepiſcopos, Epiſcopos, Abbates, Priores, Comites, & Barones Regni Angliæ ad oſtendendum, &c. whereby it appears, who were then the Conſtituent Parts or Members of our Engliſh Parliaments, viz. the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, &c. Earls and Barons of the Kingdom; ſo that (as the Doctor believes) there is no ſuch univerſal Silence concerning the Conſtituent Parts of our Parliament, as Mr. Petyt and his Friends ſuppoſe, from the want of the Parliament-Rolls of thoſe Times, moſt of which, tho' they are loſt, yet the Doctor thinks there are enough left to ſatisfie any reaſonable Perſon, that there were then no Commons in Parliament, in the ſenſe they are now taken.

* Fol. 189. n. 50.

Now, to return an Anſwer to what hath been here ſaid, it ſeems, notwithſtanding all the Doctor's diligence, he can find but three Writs of Summons to Biſhops or Lords, in the ſpace of near forty Years, within which time there might have been as many Parliaments ſummon'd; for as to King John's Reign, it is certain, that moſt part of the Cloſe-Rolls are loſt, and thoſe of Henry the Third were very careleſly kept, there being but very few things entred under each Year, and in ſome none at all; and from the Forty ninth Year of his Reign to the end of it, there are no Writs of Summons to be found, either to Biſhops, Lords, or Commons.

But to ſay ſomewhat to theſe Writs the Doctor hath cited, it is not my own Opinion alone, but that of divers Learned Antiquaries, that they are not Summons to a Common Council of the whole Kingdom, but only to Great Councils of the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, to conſult of ſome arduous Affairs concerning the making of War or Peace; their Power being much greater in that Age than it was either before or ſince.

And as for this laſt Writ, which the Doctor would needs have to be a Summons to Parliament, in the Thirty eighth Year of this King, becauſe Matt. Paris calls it ſo, this is no convincing Argument with me; for this Author ſometimes calls a Great Council or Colloquy, to which the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, were often ſummon'd a Parliament; for that word being then come lately into faſhion, and of a French Original, is often uſed for a Colloquium or Treaty or Council with the Parties above-mention'd, as being all of much the ſame ſignification. But what may ſufficiently ſatisfie any indifferent Perſon, that this laſt Writ to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was not a Summons to Parliament, is, that it is thus enter'd upon the Margin of the Roll, Summonitio ad Concilium; but this the Doctor thought fit prudently to conceal, as he commonly doth any thing that makes againſt him: Nay, the Learned Mr. Selden and the induſtrious Mr. Pryn, tho' they have printed the two former of theſe Writs, as Summons to Parliament, yet take no notice of the laſt, for the Reaſon already given; which ſure they would have done, had they not been ſatisfied it could not deſerve that Title.

I might have here concluded this part of the Diſcourſe, becauſe Sir H. Spelman, and after him Mr. Pryn think it ſufficient to ſtop here, tho' they ſuppoſe the Commons not to have been ſummon'd to Parliament, until the 49th of Henry the Third: But ſince Dr. Brady from the loſs of Writs of Summons, and the neglect of any expreſs mention of the Commons, any otherwiſe than by the Word Communitas Regni, runs back to his old beloved Notion, that this Word muſt only ſignifie the Community or Body of Tenants in Capite, and that the ſummoning the Commons to Parliament having began in a time of Rebellion, was again left off, and omitted during all the reſt of this King's Reign, being near ſeven Years after, and was further diſcontinued, until the middle of that of Edward the Firſt; in whoſe Eighteenth Year, the Doctor hath diſcover'd an old blind Writ not enter'd on any Roll, but written in a looſe Schedule, which he wou'd needs have to be a Writ of Summons to the Commons to come to a Parliament at Weſtminſter, therefore this he will have to be the firſt that was ever iſſued out to that purpoſe in this King's Reign.

Having given you a ſhort view of the Doctor's Notions, I ſhall next ſet down the Authorities and Reaſons he brings to ſupport them: And to begin with the Remainder of the Reign of Henry the Third, he aſſerts that the Commons were never mention'd in any Record or Statute of this King ſince the Forty ninth; for after his Victory at Eveſham, Matt. Paris relates that He call'd a Parliament at Wincheſter, Ib. p. 144. to which we do not find any Commons ſummon'd, as before; but the King by the Advice of his Magnates Alone, ſeis'd the Liberties of the City of London, and alſo they gave Him all the Lands of the ſaid Rebels.

The Doctor being very ſhort in what he ſays concerning the manner of the making the Dictum de Kenelworth, I ſhall give you a fuller Relation of it from Matt. Paris, who writes that there was another Parliament ſummon'd the Year following at Kenelworth, where it was agreed by the Common Aſſent of the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and All Others there preſent, that ſix Perſons by them choſen, being all (except one) either Biſhops or Barons, ſhould name ſix Others, and the whole Twelve to judge concerning thoſe who were diſinherited for their late Rebellion; and their Determination or Award is called Dictum de Kenelworth, which was made to abate the Rigour of the late Parliament at Wincheſter, whereby all thoſe that took part with Montfort were declared to have forfeited their Eſtates; for that being found too ſevere, to encourage ſeveral of the Barons to come in and deſiſt from their Rebellion, it was by this Award or Sentence ordain'd, that the Perſons ſo diſinherited might compound for five Years Value of their Eſtates.

This Sentence or Award (as the Doctor ſays) was drawn up by ſeveral Commiſſioners nominated by the Parliament, being all Biſhops or Great Earls, or Barons, and no Commoners among them; from whence he infers, that had there been any Commons in this Parliament, they would certainly have had Commiſſioners of their own Order, as well as the Biſhops and Lords.

Before I return an Anſwer to theſe Arguments, which the Doctor hath brought from theſe two laſt Parliaments and their Proceedings, I cannot but obſerve upon his firſt Reaſon, why King Henry the Third ſhould not think fit to ſummon the Commons during the reſt of his Reign, becauſe, ſays he, it was firſt began by Montfort during his Rebellion; which will prove no ſufficient Reaſon at all, if it be looked into, and that from the Account the Doctor himſelf has given of it, viz. the great Fear Montfort had of the too great Concourſe of the Earls, Barons, and Tenants in Capite with their Retinues; for if this were a ſufficient Cauſe for Montfort to leave them out the laſt Year, it made much more for the King's Intereſt to do the ſame in this; ſince it was the too great Power of theſe Barons and Tenants in Capite, that the King was then moſt afraid of, for they were the ſame Men, who had impos'd upon Him the late Oxford Proviſions, and therefore there was very good reaſon again to ſummon the Commons, to counterbalance the exorbitant Power of the Greater Nobility.

But to ſay ſomewhat to the Authorities the Doctor hath brought from the Parliaments of Wincheſter and Kenelworth; the Rolls of the former are loſt, and there is no more left of them on Record, than that Writ, or Commiſſion, which the Doctor hath given us, which recites, that by the unanimous Conſent of all the Magnatum or Great Men, the King had granted Him the Seiſin and Poſſeſſion of all the Rebel's Eſtates, in the late War; which is no Argument to prove, that No Commons were there, ſince I have ſo often made it plain, that under this Word Magnates, not only the Knights of Shires, but Citizens and Burgeſſes were frequently comprehended. 'Tis true, there were no Writs extant to prove the Commons were then poſititively ſummon'd; neither is there any reaſon to believe there were ever any to induce the contrary; for if it were a wiſe Invention of Montfort to ſummon the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, to abate the Power of the Tenants in Capite, it was certainly as good Policy for this King to continue it. But to add ſomewhat more concerning this Parliament at Kenelworth, I ſhall admit all the matter of Fact to be true as it is related from Matt. Weſtminſter, who ſays, that the Twelve Commiſſioners appointed to draw up the Statute then to be made, were choſen de Potentioribus Procerum, & Prudentioribus Prælatorum, and alſo the French Record (cited by the Doctor) together with Sir William Dugdale's Comment upon it, makes it out plain enough, that the Lay-Commiſſioners, who were choſen by all the Parties there named, to make this Statute, were all Great Earls and Barons, tho' in the Record it ſelf only ſtil'd Knights.

B. A. P. p. 144.

Well, what follows from all this? that the Commons (ſays the Doctor) could have no hand in this choice, becauſe the tous Autres, or Omnes Alii, mention'd in this and other Records, muſt needs always ſignify the ſmaller Tenants in Capite: But I think thoſe Words may with much greater Probability mean the Commons as now taken, unleſs the Doctor could bring any poſitive proof to the contrary, ſince they were ſummon'd but the laſt Year, and why they ſhould not be ſo now, I can ſee no reaſon, but rather the contrary, as I have already ſhewn: And if this Argument be good, that no Commoners were there, becauſe none of them were choſen Commiſſioners for drawing up this Judgment of Kenelworth, then by the ſame Rule none of the ordinary Tenants in Capite were there neither, becauſe none under the degree of an Earl or Baron was elected to be a Commiſſioner to draw up that Statute.

But as for the Silence of the Hiſtorians, and their not mentioning the Commons to be ſummon'd to Parliament during the reſt of this King's Reign, that were indeed a conſiderable Argument, if they had ever mention'd their being ſummon'd in the Forty ninth Year; but that they never did, is clear from the Silence of William of Riſhanger, the Continuator of Matt. Paris and Matt. Weſtminſter concerning this Parliament; the latter wholly omitting it, as alſo that at Wincheſter, and mentions only one held at Weſtminſter at Chriſtmas, in the Year 1266. where he ſays the Nobles of the Kingdom aſſembled together; and thenhe proceeds to that ſummon'd to Kenelworth the ſame Year; where his Words are Clerus & Populus convocantur, both Clergy and People were ſummon'd. Now I have already proved, that under theſe laſt Words, by both theſe Authors, the Commons as well as the Lords are often comprehended; as they may likewiſe be by the following Phraſe concerning the Parliament at Weſtminſter the next Year, which the King held cum Potentioribus Terræ ſuæ; and that this Word did not only ſignify the Greater Nobility, in this Author, appears by what he ſays before in the Year 1265, when after the Battle of Eveſham the King came to Windſor, and there committed the Potentiores Civitatis London (the moſt powerful or eminent Citizens) to Priſon: And indeed Thomas Wikes is the only Author that expreſly mentions this Parliament of the Forty ninth of Henry the Third; and tho' not beginning the Year until our Lady-day, he places it under A. D. 1264, when on the twentieth day after Chriſtmas, they were ſummon'd by the Earl of Leiceſter, (Simon Montfort) facta eſt London Convocatio non minima Procerum Anglicorum, ſays my Author; from which Words I argue thus, either that he intended thereby to comprehend the Commons, that were ſummon'd to this Parliament, or he did not; if the latter, and that he omitted to mention them thro' Careleſneſs or Neglect, why might not Matt. Paris and Matt. Weſtminſter do ſo likewiſe? but if the former be true, (as it is moſt likely) then the Words Convocatio Procerum muſt there ſignify All the Eſtates or Conſtituent Members of this Parliament; and of the ſame ſignification is that Expreſſion in Matt. Paris, Magna Nobilium Multitudo, which includes the ſmaller, as well as the greater Nobility, now comprehended under Lords and Commons: So that if the Word Proceres be of ſo large an extent in this Author, I can ſee no reaſon, why

Chr. T. Wikes p. 65.

Others may not make uſe of it in the ſame Senſe, as well as He.

But perhaps it will be further objected by thoſe of the other Opinion, that King Henry did ſo quel the Power of the Great Lords and Tenants in Capite, at the Battel of Eveſham, that He was in no more apprehenſion of any thing they could do againſt Him, and therefore He had no occaſion to ſummon the Commons again to balance them. And that according to the Authority of Mr. Cambden's nameleſs Author, cited in his Preface, after the Confuſions of the late War, only thoſe Earls and Barons, and no Others, came to Parliament, to whom the King vouchſafed to direct his Writs of Summons : To this it may be anſwer'd,

That, Firſt, the Authority of this Writer, cited by Mr. Cambden, may very well be queſtion'd, becauſe he doth not tell us, who he was, nor in what time he lived ; and * Mr. Selden hath given us very good Reaſons not to give any credit to his Authority ; but ſuppoſe we ſhou'd grant it to be good, yet it makes rather againſt the Antiquity of the Houſe of Peers, than againſt the Commons as now conſtituted ; for having thus humbled the Power of the Great Lords and Tenants in Capite, there could be no better way to make a Counter-balance againſt it, than continuing the Knights of Shires and Repreſentatives of Cities and Boroughs in his future Parliaments ; for I have already proved, that the former were neither always choſen out of the Tenants in Capite, nor did repreſent them Alone, as Dr. Brady ſuppoſes, ſince they were elected by all thoſe that ow'd Suit and Service to the County-Court ; and as for the Citizens and Burgeſſes, tho' ſome of them were Tenants in Capite, yet the Major part of them were otherwiſe ; ſo that if the King would have any Parliament at all, his ſafeſt way muſt have been to continue it after that Model which Simon Monfort is ſuppoſed to have began.

* Tit. of Hon. p. 589.

The † Doctor's next Authority is from the Statute of Marlebridge, made in the Fifty ſecond Year of this King, for the confirming and eſtabliſhing (as it were) the Body of the Law of this Nation, the Preamble whereof is to this effect: That by the Care and Providence of the King Himſelf, for the Melioration of his Kingdom, and the more full exhibition of Juſtice, there were call'd together the more Diſcreet Perſons of the ſame Kingdom, as well the Greater as the Leſs ſort, by whom the Proviſions, Eſtabliſhments, Agreements and Ordinances in this Statute comprehended, were made : Upon this Preamble the Doctor obſerves, Firſt, that all the Great Barons were not preſent at the making of this Statute, but only the more Diſcreet, viz. ſuch as the King thought fit to call, who were ſummon'd always by particular Writs. Secondly, that neither were all the Leſs Barons or Tenants in Capite preſent in this Parliament, but only the more Diſcreet Perſons among them, and theſe call'd by the King, and in all probability by particular Directions ; for by a General Summons, according to King John's Charter, directed to the Sheriff of each County, to ſummon all the Minor Barons and Tenants in Capite, it could not be, that only the more Diſcreet Perſons of them ſhou'd be call'd together ; nor is there in this Preamble the leaſt hint, or intimation, of any Writs directed to Counties, Cities or Burghs, for the choice of Members.

† B. A. P. p. 144, 145.

Thirdly, from the ſixth Chapter of this Statute, which was One of the chief Laws contain'd in it, the Doctor obſerves, that Britton ſays it was made, per la purveiance de Robert Walerand, and by Common Aſſent of the Great Lords of the Realm. The Doctor farther notes, that Robert Walerand was a Baron, a Soldier, and Lawyer, and died in the Firſt of Edward the Firſt, and that Britton lived at this time, and well underſtood the Conſtitutions of Parliaments, and wrote his Books of the Laws of England, bearing that name, in the time of King Edward aforeſaid, and by his Direction, and ſo leaves the reſt to the Judgment of the Reader.

In anſwer to this I cannot but obſerve, that the Doctor being tranſported with high and arbitrary Notions of the King's Prerogative, hath not only deſtroy'd whatſoever he hath before aſſerted concerning King John's Charter, as being intended for a Form or Model to all future Parliaments during the Reigns of that King and his Son Henry the Third; but alſo will have it, that this Prince was ſo fluſh'd with Victory at Eveſham, that He not only took upon Him to make Laws without any of the Tenants in Capite, but alſo without the Conſent of all the Biſhops, Earls and Barons of the Kingdom; and only ſuch Lords met as the King was pleaſed to ſummon to this Parliament: By which he hath ſhewn an eaſy way, how any other future King may deal with Parliaments whenever He hath got the Power in his Hands, which is, to admit and exclude whom He pleaſes, and turn the Great Council of the Kingdom into a French Aſſembly des Notables.

But I hope I ſhall ſhew, that the Doctor's Interpretation and Comment upon this Chapter are forced, and contarary to the true Intent and Meaning thereof; in order to which give me leave in the firſt place to obſerve, that there is no certain Concluſion to be drawn from the different Forms of penning of antient Statutes, nor who were ſummon'd to the making of them, nor by whom they were enacted; ſome of them (it is true) are drawn in the Form of the King's Charters or Writs, without any mention of Aſſent either of the Lords or Commons; Others are ſaid to be enacted by the whole Realm, without any mention of the King at all; and I could have given you a Liſt of divers old Statutes from the Reign of King Henry the Third to the time of King Edward the Third, in which there is no mention at all made, either of the King, or any other of the Three Eſtates; and yet no Man, I think, will deny that theſe Statutes were made and agreed to by them All according to the uſual Cuſtom, tho' it be not particularly expreſſed; and therefore to give a better Account of this Law, it is fit we conſider, that theſe Words, evocatis Diſcretioribus Regni, are no more reſtrictive to ſome particular Perſons than if it had been in the ſuperlative Degree, and inſtead of Diſcretioribus it had been Diſcretiſſimis, or Sapientiſſimis Regni, which no Man can ſuppoſe to mean only a few of thoſe whom the King ſhould judge the Wiſeſt and moſt Diſcreet Men of the whole Kingdom; and therefore we muſt not attend only to the meer Grammatical, but Legal Senſe of theſe words, and then it amounts to no more than this, that by the Diſcreet Men of the Higher Degree were meant the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and under thoſe of the Lower Order were intended the Commons.

What the Doctor ſays concerning Robert Walerand, is not material, for ſuppoſing him to be never ſo great a Soldier, or Lawyer, yet he had nothing to do to propoſe or offer this Law, but as he was one of the King's Council in Parliament, whoſe Buſineſs it was to draw up and prepare thoſe Bills, which being there approved of, were to be paſt into Statutes; and therefore Britton might very well ſay, that this Law was made by the Proviſion or Foreſight of this Robert Walerand, with the common Aſſent of the Great Lords, as the moſt eminent Perſons that had to do in it; and yet for all that the Commons might likewiſe give their Conſents to it, for otherwiſe if Britton muſt be literally underſtood, what becomes of the Diſcreti de Minoribus, mention'd in this Statute to have given their Conſents, as well as the Majores? whereas this Author mentions none at whoſe Requeſt it was made, but the Great Lords only.

* Ib. p. 145.

From this Reign the * Doctor proceeds to that of Edward the Firſt, who, he ſays in the beginning, and for ſeveral Years of his Reign and Government (for ought appears from divers Statutes then made, and other Records) did not iſſue out Writs for the Election of Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, as at this Day, but uſed the ſame way and courſe of ſummoning and holding Parliaments, as his Father had done before him. In anſwer to this of the Statutes, we ſhall come to them immediately after one word. As to the want of Writs of Summons to the Commons it is no Objection, ſince all the Writs of that kind, to the Biſhops and Lords, are likewiſe loſt or deſtroy'd, for the firſt twenty four Years of this King's Reign.

* Clauſ. 3. Ed. 1. M. 21. Dorſ.

And for the Statutes, the Doctor begins with that of Weſtminſter, which is ſaid to be made by the Aſſent of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and the Whole Community or Commonalty of the Land thither ſummon'd; by which laſt words the Doctor would needs have to be underſtood the leſs Barons and Tenants in Capite; and that there were no Other Repreſentatives of the Commons there, he likewiſe endeavours to prove by the * Writ of Summons directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for the Prorogation of this Parliament, in which is recited, that the Parliament which was to meet on the Quindene of the Purification, &c. being for ſome Cauſes prorogued until the Morrow after the cloſe of Eaſter next following, the King commands and requires the ſaid Archbiſhop to be preſent at the ſame, to Treat and Ordain, together with the Prelates and Great Men of the Kingdom concerning the Buſineſs of the ſame, &c.

By this Writ the Doctor thinks we may ſee the King's purpoſe to hold a General Parliament with the Prelates and Great Men of his Kingdom only; which words Great Men very frequently comprehended, as I have ſaid more than once and again, as well the Barones Majores, as Minores, the Earls, Barons, and greater Tenants in Capite, and the leſs, which he takes then to have been the Community of the Kingdom.

In anſwer to this, Since I have already ſhewn from divers Precedents, and particularly that of the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, that the Latin Phraſes Communitas Regni, and the French, la Commune de la Terre, are not the Body of the Tenants in Capite, but that of the Whole Commons of England repreſented by Knights, Citizens, tizens, and Burgeſſes are to be underſtood, I ſhall ſay the leſs to this Interpretation, only ſhew the abſurdity of the Doctor's Notion in it, and for the entire ſatisfaction of the Reader in this Point, I will cite ſome Precedents from Records and Acts of Parliament of this King and his Succeſſor. The firſt is, that Statute or Ordinance made in King Edward the Firſt's Reign, tho' the Year when is uncertain; but the Title of it tranſlated out of French is thus; Theſe are the Uſages which the Commonalty of Kent claim to have in Tenements held by Gavel-kind. Now Gavel-kind Lands being generally in Socage, the Owners of them could not have been call'd the Commonalty of Kent, had that Expreſſion only ſignified Tenants in Capite by Knight's Service.

I come now to ſome Statutes and Records of a more general extent; for in the Reign of Edward the Second, when by the Doctor's own Confeſſion the Commons, as now Repreſented, were preſent in all Parliaments, the ſame Word often occurs, and muſt therefore be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe as in the Act of Pardon for the Death of Piers Gaveſton made in the Seventh of this King, and drawn up in French, which is granted by the King with the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and the whole Commonalty of the Realm there aſſembled: So alſo in the Latin Records, as appears by an Act of Pardon granted in Parliament in the twelfth Year of this King: Add likewiſe the Statute of York, of the ſame Year, written in French, which is recited to have been made per aſſent des Prelats, Counts, Barons, & la Commune du Royalme illonques Aſſemblez; where you ſee, that the Latin word Communitas, and the French la Commune, ſignifie the ſame Order of Men. And the like Form is continued in many other Statutes made in the Reigns of King Edward the Third, Richard the Second, and other ſucceeding Kings, of which I could give divers Inſtances if it were neceſſary; and I deſire to ask the Gentlemen of the Doctor's Opinion, whether by theſe Phraſes the Tenants in Capite, or the Commons as now Repreſented, are to be underſtood: They cannot ſay the former, ſince they had for ſeveral Years diſuſed to appear in Parliament in a Body, as the Doctor himſelf acknowledges; but if they will own the Latter (as I think they muſt) I ſhould be glad to ſee any good reaſon, why the ſame Phraſes ſhould not ſignifie the ſame Perſons in the Reign of Henry the Third, and until the Eighteenth Year of Edward the Firſt: But perhaps they will ſay, that they were not till then ſummon'd to Parliament, after the Forty ninth of Henry the Third: This is to beg the Queſtion; and whether they have yet proved that Point, by what hath been already alledg'd by their Doctor, muſt be left to the Judgment of the Impartial Reader.

But what the Doctor would infer from the words of the Writ directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, is yet more trivial; for He grants, that the Writs of Summons to this Parliament are loſt, tho' it is very likely they were enter'd either upon the Precedent Roll, or elſe on the ſame with this cited by the Doctor; yet from this he erroniouſly infers, that by the word Magnates or Great Men, put after the Prelates, the greater and leſs Tenants in Capite are to be underſtood; whereas whoever would but conſult the like Forms of Writs in Sir William Dugdale's Summons to Parliament, from the Twenty fourth to the end of this King's Reign, will in moſt of them find the ſame Expreſſions ad Ordinandum & Tractandum cum Prælatis & Magnatibus Regni, in the Writs of Summons to the Commons, as they are alſo in ſeveral other ſucceeding King's Reigns.

The Doctor's next Authority is from the Statute de Bigamis, ſuppos'd to be made in the ſame Year with the Parliament laſt mention'd, in the Preamble of which it is recited to this effect, (as is here tranſlated) In the Preſence of the Venerable Fathers, ſome of the Biſhops of England, and Others of the King's Council, the underwritten Conſtitutions were recited, and afterwards they were heard, or read, and publiſhed before the King and his Council, and becauſe All of his Council, as well Juſticiaries as Others, agreed, that they ſhould be written for perpetual Memory, and firmly obſerved, &c.

In the following Paragraph the Doctor finds fault with Sir Edward Coke, for obſerving, that this Aſſembly of the Biſhops and Others of the King's Council, expreſſed under theſe Words, & Aliorum de Concilio Regis, were only to ſhew they were a ſelect Committee of Biſhops, Barons and Judges, who were to draw up this Statute, and then to report and publiſh it before the King and his Council in Parliament, expreſſed by theſe Words, Auditæ & Publicatæ, in the Preamble: This the Doctor finds fault with, as not having any Senſe or Meaning in the words, which whether they have or no, I muſt leave it (as the Doctor doth) to the judicious Reader to decide: But in the following * Page he grants ſufficient for our Purpoſe, in theſe words, 'Whether this was a Parliament, or what were the Conſtituent Parts of a Parliament at this time, or of this Parliament in particular, I think it is neither ſo eaſie nor plain to determine as Sir Edward would have it to be; perhaps the beſt underſtanding of the Preamble and firſt Chapter may be, that the Laws and Conſtitutions were prepared by the King and his Council, with the Aſſiſtance of the Juſtices and Lawyers that were of it, or called to aſſiſt in it, and declared afterward in Parliament; for it is ſaid in the Cloſe of the Statute, that the ſame Conſtitutions were publiſhed at Weſtminſter in a Parliament after the Feaſt of St. Michael, in the Fourth Year of King Edward the Son of King Henry, and from that Time they ſhall take Place. From whence we may obſerve, that let theſe Conſtitutions be prepar'd by whom the Doctor pleaſes, they had no binding Authority upon the Nation, until they were publiſhed (that is paſſed) in full Parliament.

Ibid.

Then the Doctor proceeds to the Preamble of the Statute of Gloceſter, which is ſaid to be made in the Year of Grace A. D. 1276, (tho' erroniouſly, for it ſhou'd be 1278) which was the 6th of Edward the Firſt, wherein it is recited, that the King, for the Reaſons there ſet down, having call'd the moſt Diſcreet Perſons of his Realm, auxibien des Greindres come des Meindres, that is, as well of the Greater, as the Leſs, it is Eſtabliſhed and Ordain'd; This Preamble (ſays the Doctor) is almoſt the very ſame with that to the Statute of Marlebridge, and therefore he will ſay nothing further of it; and only adds, that by the Preface to the Statute of Weſtminſter the Second, made in the Thirteenth of Edward the Firſt, it appears, that the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and the King's Council, were the Conſtituent Parts of this, or ſome other Parliament, held at Gloceſter, that Year. I need ſay no more, than the Doctor hath here done, concerning the Meaning of the words in this Statute, of the Greater, as well as Leſs ſort of Wiſe Men, and I ſhall leave it to the Reader's Judgment to conſider, whether by thoſe words the Lords and Commons are not more likely to be underſtood, than the Prelates, Earls and Barons, and Others of the King's Council Alone, which laſt, I never heard to have been one of the Eſtates of Parliament before; nor doth the Statute the Doctor cites countenance his Opinion, for tho' that of Weſtminſter the Second recites, that the King had lately on the Quindene of St. John the Baptiſt, in the Sixth Year of his Reign, call'd together the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and his Council at Gloceſter, yet it is not there ſaid, that the Council had any hand in the enacting of thoſe Statutes, tho' they might draw them up into Form.

Ibid.

His next Inſtance is, from the Statute of Mort-main, which was made by King Edward the Firſt in the Seventh Year of his Reign, by advice of the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Other Lieges of his Kingdom, being of his Council; where the Doctor underſtands the words de Concilio, to mean the King's Council in Parliament, as if their Conſents had been neceſſary to the enacting of this Statute; whereas in truth the words Aliorum Fidelium de Concilio Noſtro, are only words of Form, or elſe are to be underſtood of the Commons as part of the Great Council of the Kingdom.

The Doctor's laſt Inſtance is, the Statute of Acton-Burnel or Statute Merchant of the Eleventh of Edward the Firſt, which was made by the King Himſelf and his whole Council, Le Roy, per Luy & per tout ſon Counſel, ad Ordain & Eſtablie, Que Merchant, &c. and this was done in Parliament, as appears by the Statute of Merchants, made in the Thirteenth Year of the ſame King, by theſe words in the French Preamble, which is thus in Engliſh: Our Lord the King by Himſelf and by his Council, at his Parliament which He held at Acton-Burnel, in the Eleventh Year of his Reign, Made and Ordain'd theſe Eſtabliſhments, &c. by which the Doctor hath recited enough for my Purpoſe; for it might very well be, that tho' this Statute was made (that is, drawn up and approved of) by the King and his whole Council, yet it appears by the Preamble to this laſt Statute which recites it, that it was Enacted in the Parliament at Acton Burnel, and if ſo, muſt have had the Conſents of All the Eſtates there preſent, as well as the King; but as for his Council in Parliaments having any hand in the making of a Statute, any further than the drawing it into Form, we are beholding to the Doctor for that rare Diſcovery; ſince I do not find any, either Antiquary or Lawyer, who is of that Opinion, beſides himſelf.

But we are now come to the Critical time, when the Doctor ſuppoſes the Knights of Shires were again ſummon'd to Parliament, after a long Intermiſſion, from the 49*th* of Henry the Third to the 18*th* Year of this King, when the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Great Men of the Kingdom, with one Aſſent in full Parliament granted to Him Forty Shillings of every Knight's Fee, for an Aid to marry his Daughter, for themſelves, and the Whole Community of the Kingdom, as appears on Record: Then the Doctor cites a Writ of the Thirtieth of Edward the Firſt, for the levying the ſaid Forty Shillings on every Knight's Fee, which it ſeems had been hitherto ſuperceded, but this the King commanded then to be paid in with all Expedition. I have omitted ſetting down this Writ at large, becauſe I have already recited the moſt material parts of it, in what I have ſaid for the proving of the words Communitas Regni to ſignify in this King's Reign, the Repreſentatives of the Commons as now underſtood, and not the leſs Tenants in Capite; but the Doctor makes uſe of it as a Foundation to build his Hypotheſis upon, that the Knights of Shires were not ſummon'd to appear at the beginning of this Parliament, nor till toward the latter end of it, and to prove it, he thus proceeds with great Confidence.

Ibid. p. 149. Hitherto (ſays the Doctor) in this King's Reign, there appears nothing that can evince either the ſummoning, or being of any Commons, as now underſtood, or any Knights, Citizens, or Burgeſſes, in any of theſe Parliaments, we are at leaſt left in Uncertainties; nay, the Proof is moſt ſtrong on the Negative, that there were none. Yet in this Year, viz. the Eighteenth of Edward the Firſt, there is a Bundle of Writs, directed to the Sheriffs of ſeveral, or moſt of the Counties of England, and they are the Antienteſt extant, or perhaps that ever were; for (in probability) the calling of Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, according to that Example, was diſcontinued from the 49th of Henry the Third unto this time, by which two or three Knights were directed to be choſen for each County. The Writ it ſelf follows, which ſince the Doctor lays ſo much ſtreſs upon, I ſhall give you in Engliſh.

'Edward by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, 'and Duke of Aquitain, to the Sheriff of Weſtmorland, Greeting; 'whereas We have been eſpecially petition'd, and requeſted by the 'Earls, Barons, and Others the Great Men of our Kingdom, con'cerning certain matters, upon which We will have Conference 'and Treaty, as well with themſelves, as with Others of the Coun'ties of that Kingdom, We command thee, without delay, that 'thou cauſe to be choſen two or three of the moſt diſcreet and 'ableſt Knights for the diſpatch of Buſineſs of the County afore'ſaid, and cauſe them to come to Us at Weſtminſter, ſo that they 'be there in three Weeks, after the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt at 'furtheſt, with full Power for themſelves, and the Whole Community 'of the County aforeſaid, to conſult and conſent for themſelves, 'and that Community, to ſuch things, which the Earls, Barons, and 'Great Men aforeſaid, ſhall there think fit to agree upon; and you are 'to have there this Writ; Witneſs my ſelf at Weſtminſter, the four'teenth day of June, in the Eighteenth Year of our Reign.

From which Writ, and what went before, the Doctor draws theſe following Obſervations: On the firſt of this Month, the King had Scutage given Him in full Parliament; fourteen days after, at the inſtance of the Earls, Barons, and other Great Men of the Kingdom, upon certain Matters by them moved, and propounded to Him, He iſſued this Writ of Summons to the Sheriffs of the ſeveral Counties, to cauſe to be choſen two or three Knights of each County, to come to Him at Weſtminſter, three Weeks after St. John Baptiſt, (which is the Eighth of July) at fartheſt.

Upon this Writ, it may be obſerved, Firſt, that it is moſt probable, (tho' it is not here abſolutely ſaid ſo) that the King was moved by the Earls, Barons, and Great Men of the Kingdom, to call theſe Knights to this Parliament; and that as this Writ is the firſt to be found after that of the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, ſo it really was the firſt Writ of Summons after that time, for the Election of Knights to repreſent the ſeveral Counties.

Ib. p. 150.

Secondly, that there could be no Citizens nor Burgeſſes choſen or ſent to this Parliament by vertue of this Writ, as they were afterward by particular Directions contain'd in the Writs ſent to the Sheriffs for electing Knights of the Shire.

Thirdly, that by this Writ, the Knights were to come to the King at Weſtminſter, three Weeks after St. John Baptiſt, at fartheſt, which was the fifteenth of July; that in the ſame Year, between the time of the Date of the Writ, and the time appointed for meeting of the Knights, the Statute of Weſtminſter the Third was made; ſo that this was either the ſame full Parliament, which gave the King Scutage on the firſt of June, and then the King and Barons, without the Commons, made this Statute, or the Knights had another Summons after the Date of this Writ, (for before that they were not at the Parliament) or the Knights came a Week before they had need to have done; but neither of the latter are probable, ſeeing the Knights were then great Husbands of their Time and Expences, and were not very forward to undertake this Service, as being conſtantly bound with, or engaged by Sureties or Manucaptors, for the performance of it, and their appearance in Parliament; and therefore it ſeems reaſonable to conclude, that this Law was made without them, and before their coming to Parliament.

I have given you the Doctor's Argument at large, tho' it be ſomewhat tedious, and (as I hope to ſhew) built upon a falſe Foundation, viz. that at the Parliament above-mention'd, the Knights of Shires were not ſummon'd, nor were preſent at the beginning of this Parliament, nor ſome Weeks after, until the Scutage of Forty Shillings upon each Knight's Fee had been granted in Parliament above five Weeks after the Parliament had began to ſit; but if the Doctor's Foundation proves falſe, and that this Parliament was diſſolved before ever theſe Knights were ſummon'd to it, then all that he hath built upon that, is falſe and precarious; for I am as confident as I can be of any thing, conſidering the Writs of Summons to the Lords, as well as the Commons are loſt and torn off from the Rolls, that the Knights of Shires were ſummon'd to this Parliament, as appears by this Tax above-mention'd, which is ſaid to be granted by the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Other Great Men of the Kingdom, pro ſe & tota Communitate, i. e. for themſelves and the Whole Community of the ſame in full Parliament. Now I have already proved, that by the words, tota Communitas Regni, is to be underſtood the Community or Body of the Commons taken diſtinctly from the reſt of the Orders aforegoing, and that it is likewiſe taken in that Senſe in the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, and in divers other Parliaments that were held during his Reign, as alſo that they were ſummon'd to the Parliaments and Great Councils in the beginning of this King's Reign we are now treating of; ſo that whether the Doctor ſays true, that hitherto in this King's Reign there appears nothing that can evince either the ſummoning or being of any Commons, as now underſtood, in any of theſe Parliaments, and that the Proof is moſt ſtrong in the Negative, that there were None, muſt be left to the Reader's Judgment, when he hath peruſed what can be produced on both ſides. But to come cloſer to the matter, the

* P. 32, 33. Doctor in his * Gloſſary grants, that by the words, tota Communitas Regni, that gave this Scutage mention'd in the Writ above-cited, is meant the Whole Community of the leſs Tenants in Capite, that granted and paid it firſt for themſelves and their Tenants in Military Service, who then were oblig'd by the King's Writ to pay them again: Now let us ſuppoſe for once that all this is true, I would be glad to know of thoſe of the Doctor's Opinion, of what ſort of Men theſe two or three Knights were, whom the Doctor ſuppoſes to be ſummon'd to appear at the latter end of this Parliament, whether were they Tenants in Capite themſelves? Or were they ſome of their Inferior Tenants by Knight's-Service or Soccage-Tenure? If theſe Gentlemen will ſay, they were the former ſort, why ſhou'd the Lords and Great Men deſire the King to ſummon two or three Knights, who were Tenants in Capite, to this Parliament, when all ^ allready or the greater part of them were ^ preſent in this Parliament, and had given this Scutage-Tax a Fortnight before the Writs for ſummoning theſe Knights were iſſued out? But if they will ſay, that they were not Tenants in Capite, but their Inferior Military Tenants, then
B.A.J. p. 214. the Doctor's ſo poſitive Aſſertion is falſe, that at firſt the Knights of Shires were choſen out of the greateſt Tenants in Capite under the Degree of Barons; and then it will not be ſo incredible, as he there makes it, that thoſe Tenants in Capite would part with this main point, of being perſonally preſent, or the Body of them repreſented by ſome of their own number in every County: How contradictory this new Diſcovery of the Doctor's is to what he aſſerts in other places, I leave to the Reader to judge? as alſo, whether he had any ſettled Principles concerning the Subject he wrote of, but only ſuch as would ſerve the preſent turn or Notion he had broach'd, and was reſolved right or wrong to maintain?

And therefore I think we may very well aſſert, that theſe Knights mention'd in the Writ the Doctor hath cited, were either ſummon'd to this Parliament in Aſſiſtance or Addition to the two other Knights, who had been ſent up before to this Parliament, or elſe came up after it was diſſolved; the former of theſe the
Ib. p. 151. Doctor's Friends can have no reaſon to oppoſe, ſince in the very Page where he concludes his Argument, he likewiſe aſſerts, that the King in this Age was not confin'd to any certain number of Knights, Citizens
* Rot. Clauſ. 22 Ed. I. M. 6. Dorſ. or Burgeſſes; and for the Proof of it the * Doctor cites two Writs
' of the Twenty ſecond of this King, to the Sheriff of Northum-
' berland; by the firſt of which He commands him to ſummon two
' Diſcreet Knights of the ſaid County, to appear at a Colloquy or ' Treaty at Weſtminſter, which was to be on the morrow of St. Mar-
' tyn next coming, to adviſe and conſent for themſelves and the ' Whole Community of the ſaid County, to thoſe things which the ' Earls, Barons, and Great Men aforeſaid, ſhou'd unanimouſly or-
' dain concerning the Premiſſes, &c. this bears date the eighth of October,

October, immediately after which, the King iſſued out another like ‘ Writ to the ſame Sheriff, commanding him, beſides the two former, ‘ that he ſhou'd cauſe two Other Knights to be choſen, and to come to ‘ Weſtminſter together with them; this bears date Octob. the 9th. Now if what the Doctor aſſerts in the ſame place be true, that ſome Legal Niceties and Punctilioes, now in Uſe, (concerning Parliamentary Proceedings) were not then judged abſolutely neceſſary, I cannot ſee any reaſon, why the King might not have order'd two or three New Knights to be choſen for each Shire, and to be added to the former that were ſummon'd to Parliament already, ſix Weeks after the Parliament had ſat, as well as to order it a day after the firſt Writ, as in the next Inſtance produced by the Doctor.

But to ſpeak freely, I make uſe of this only as Argumentum ad Hominem; for in my Opinion, not only this Writ of the Eighteenth of Edward the Firſt, but alſo thoſe of the Twenty ſecond, for the electing of Four Knights, are not for them to come to Parliaments properly ſo call'd, but only to certain Councils, Colloquies, or Treaties, which both this King as well as his Father often held with the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, when they would have their Advice upon any great or extraordinary Occaſion; ſuch as the making Peace or War, or for ordaining temporary Ordinances concerning matters of Trade, as the Exportation and Importation of Commodities, and other things of leſs moment, when the King did not think it worth the trouble of calling a Parliament; or elſe that the Matter fell out ſo ſuddenly, that the King could not ſtay till they could all meet, which then required Forty Days, as well as it does now. Yet that to theſe extrordinary Councils ſome of the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes were often ſummon'd, muſt be granted even by thoſe of the contrary Opinion, ſince they cannot deny matter of Fact, in the Inſtances I have brought, concerning the Repreſentatives of the Commons being ſummon'd to the Great Council that was held in the beginning of this King's Reign, when All the Eſtates of the Kingdom were aſſembled at Weſtminſter to ſwear Allegiance to Him; as alſo That held in the Eleventh Year of this King, to adviſe about the Condemnation of Prince David; ſo that Dr. Brady's Friends may take their choice, either to call them Parliaments, or Great Councils; if they were the former, they give up the Point they would maintain, viz. that there were No Commons ſummon'd to any Parliament of this King, until this Year we are now treating of; but if they ſay that theſe were only Great Councils, then thoſe Aſſemblies, to which theſe two or three Knights were ſummon'd, in the 18*th* and 22*d* of this King, might be to ſuch Great Councils, and not to Parliaments properly ſo call'd: And that it was ſo, appears by the Titles on the Margins of each of them, which are, de Militibus eligendis & mittendis ad Concilium; tho' the Doctor (the better to countenance his Opinion) hath been pleaſed to wave the ſetting down the Titles that are in the Margin of theſe looſe Writs, of the Eighteenth, on which he founds this new Diſcovery: But that there is a plain and manifeſt difference between Writs of Summons to Parliaments, and thoſe to Great Councils, the Reader may conſult Sir William Dugdale's Parliamentary Writs of Summons to the Biſhops and Lords, in which, tho' he hath partially omitted thoſe to the Commons, for they are alſo enter'd upon the ſame Rolls, yet in thoſe he has publiſh'd, not only the Titles to them, but even the very Body of the Writs themſelves ſufficiently diſtinguiſh between thoſe two different Aſſemblies; the Writs to Great Councils only reciting, (as theſe the Doctor hath given us) that the King would have with his Earls, Barons, and other Great Men of his Kingdom, Colloquium & Tractatum, that is, a Colloquy or Treaty, or elſe a Colloquium with the Knights of Shires alone, as it is in this Writ of the Eighteenth we are now treating of; but when the Summons is to a Parliament, it is moſt commonly not only ſo expreſs'd in the Title, but in the very Body of the Writ, that the King intends to have a Parliament at Weſtminſter, or elſewhere; and that this Diſtinction is not only found in Writs of Summons, but in antient Statutes themſelves, appears by that Ordinance or Statute againſt coming to Parliament with Armour, which tho' it be printed in Raſtal, as made in the Seventh Year of Edward the Firſt, yet doth indeed belong to that of his Son Edward the Second, and is a Writ to the Juſtices of his Bench, reciting, 'That whereas of late, before certain Perſons deputed to treat upon ſundry Debates had between Us (i. e. the King) and certain Great Men of our Realm, amongſt other things it was accorded, that in our next Parliament, Proviſion ſhou'd be made by Us, with the Common Aſſent of the Prelates, Earls and Barons, that in all Parliaments, Treaties, and other Aſſemblies, which ſhould be held in our Realm of England for ever, every Man ſhould come without Force, and without Armour, well and peaceably, &c. And a little lower He doth more plainly diſtinguiſh between theſe two Parliaments that follow; 'And now in our Parliament at Weſtminſter after the ſaid Treaty, the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and the Communalty of our Realm there aſſembled to take Advice of this Buſineſs, have ſaid, that to Us it belongeth, and our part it is, by our Royal Seigniory, ſtreightly to defend wearing of Armour, and all other Force againſt our Peace at all times, when it ſhall pleaſe Us, and to puniſh them who ſhall do contrary, according to the Laws and Uſages of our Realm.

And beſides this Statute, whoever will but look over that Treatiſe which goes under the Name of Sir Robert Cotton's Abridgement of the Records of Parliament, may there obſerve a manifeſt Difference between Parliaments and Great Councils of the Kingdom. And tho' Dr. Brady, to ſerve a turn, doth here confound theſe two different Aſſemblies, yet that he himſelf, when there is no preſent occaſion for diſguiſing the Truth, doth make a difference between a Great Council and a Parliament, appears from the * Second Volume of his Compleat Hiſtory of England, wherein from the † Cloſe Roll of Edward the Third, he relates, that in the Fourth Year of his Reign, on the ſixth of September, He ſummon'd a Great Council to meet at Nottingham on the Munday before the Feaſt of St. Luke, or Quindene of St. Michael, where He was better inform'd, and the Practices of his Mother and Mortimer were detected, &c. And that this was no Parliament, appears by what follows in the next Paragraph, that when this was done, the King being then at Leiceſter, on the 23d of October, ſummon'd a Parliament to meet at Weſtminſter, on on Munday next after the Feaſt of St. Catherine, or 25th of November; and the like Councils he takes notice of in other Places of his Hiſtory, as I could eaſily ſhew you if there were occaſion.

† Clauſ. 4. Ed. III. M. 23. Dorſ.

But I am ſenſible, tho' it will readily be granted (as indeed it cannot be well denied) that there were ſuch Great Councils and Treaties different from Parliaments, yet it may still be urged by those of the Dr's opinion that theſe Knights, mention'd in this Writ of the Eighteenth of Edward the Firſt, (made uſe of by the Doctor) were not ſummon'd to ſuch a Great Council, but to the Parliament, which was then ſitting, as appears by the words of the Writ it ſelf, reciting, that whereas the King had been eſpecially Petitioned and Requeſted, by the Earls, Barons, and Others of the Great Men of his Kingdom, concerning certain matters, upon which He will have Conference and Treaty, as well with Themſelves, as with Others of the Counties of the Kingdom, &c. from whence the Doctor well obſerves, that it is very probable, (tho' it is not here abſolutely ſaid ſo) that the King was eſpecially moved by the Earls, Barons, and Great Men of the Kingdom, to call theſe Knights to this Parliament; and he alſo further urges as a thing certain, that theſe Knights came up to this Parliament whilſt it was ſtill ſitting; for it appears by the Statute of Weſtminſter the Third, that it continu'd until the eighth of July, and the fifteenth was the day appointed for theſe Knights of Shires to be at London, there to adviſe and conſent to ſuch things as the Earls, Barons, and Other Great Men ſhould think fit to agree upon; which muſt needs refer to the Earls and Barons then aſſembled in Parliament, and no Other. And as for the Inference I have now made from the words of the Writ, that it was to a Colloquy or Treaty, and not to a Parliament, and that in all Writs of Summons to Parliaments the word Parliament is expreſſed either in the Writ or in the Title, this Rule doth not always hold true, for in the Writs on the Cloſe-Rolls of the Twenty ſecond of Edward the Firſt, (which I my ſelf have already cited) for the ſummoning Four Knights from every County, is only to a Colloquy or Treaty with the Earls, Barons, and Chief Men, without ſo much as the word Parliament being mention'd, and the Title to this firſt Writ being only de Militibus eligendis & mittendis ad Concilium: yet that it was not a Great Council, but a Parliament properly ſo call'd, appears by another † Record of the ſame Year, which recites, that upon the very day this Parliament met, viz. Nov. 12. they gave the King a Tenth part of all their Moveable Goods; and as likewiſe appears by the Writ or Commiſſion for appointing Aſſeſſors, and Collectors, for the ſame Tenth.

† Pat. 22. Ed. I. M. 2. in Scedula.

Alſo as to the Parliament which was * ſummon'd to meet the Sunday after St. Martin, or 11th of November, (being the Twenty third of this King) tho' the Titles to the Writs are de Parliamento tenendo, & de Parliamento prorogando, yet in the Body of the Writ it ſelf the word Parliament is not inſerted, but only that the King will have a Colloquy or Treaty with his Earls, Barons, and other Great Men, as you'll ſee by the Writ it ſelf, which † Dr. Brady hath publiſhed at large but two Leaves further; and that this was a Parliament appears by another * Writ which relates to this very Parliament, reciting, that the Earls, Barons, Knights, and All Others of the Kingdom, Kingdom, gave an Eleventh, and the Citizens and Burgeſſes, and Other Good Men of the King's Demeſns, gave Him a Seventh Part of all their Moveable Goods. And this I take the more notice of, becauſe the Doctor ſuppoſes that this was the firſt Parliament, to which the Citizens and Burgeſſes were ever ſummon'd, from the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, to this very Year; but of this Writ I ſhall ſay more hereafter.

I will now try what I can to anſwer theſe Objections, and as conſiderable as the Doctor's Arguments may appear, I hope I may have leave to aſſert, that his Inferences are founded upon bare Suppoſitions, becauſe the Writs of Summons to this Parliament, both to the Lords and Commons, are quite loſt and taken off the Cloſe-Rolls; ſo that the main Queſtion between us, is, whether this Writ of Summons of the Eighteenth of Edward the Firſt, for theſe two or three Knights, was to come to a Parliament, or to a Colloquy or Treaty; that it was not to the former, I muſt ſtill inſiſt; Firſt, becauſe this Writ is not enter'd on the Cloſe-Roll, but was only found (as the Doctor himſelf acknowledges) in an odd Bundle amongſt divers other Writs rnd Records of a different nature; neither is it certain whether theſe Writs that remain (being but for twenty five Counties) were ever once entire, and directed to all the reſt of the Sheriffs of the Counties; for if they were not, it is evident theſe could be no Summons to a General Parliament, and for Repreſentatives to be choſen for all the Shires of England. And, Secondly, (as I have already obſerved) there is neither in the Title to the Writ, nor in the Body of it, any mention of theſe Knights being ſummon'd to treat with the Lords and Great Men in Parliament, but only, that the King would have a Colloquy or Treaty with them, and thoſe of the Counties; and therefore He enjoins them to be at Weſtminſter, at ſuch a day, to adviſe upon and agree to ſuch things as the Earls, Barons and Great Men ſhould think fit to ordain: Which meeting with them, might be as well after this Parliament was riſen, as before; and that the Buſineſs they were to treat about was not Parliamentary, ſuch as granting of Money and conſenting to Laws, appears from the very words of the Writ it ſelf, which are only ad Conſulendum & Conſentiendum; whereas all Parliamentary Writs of the Commons that remain upon Record, have always faciendum likewiſe inſerted. And tho' I grant that there have been Common Councils of the Kingdom, whereto the Commons have been ſummon'd, as the Record now cited (and againſt which I have nothing to object) doth teach us, and alſo that ſometimes in Writs to Parliaments, the word Colloquium is uſed inſtead of Parliamentum; yet however the Title to the Writ of the Twenty third of this King ſufficiently declares, that this Aſſembly was a Parliament, and not a meer Council or Treaty. I confeſs alſo that in this King's Reign, the words Colloquium and Parliamentum (the latter being of a French, and the former of a Latin Original) were not ſo nicely diſtinguiſh'd, as they were in his Succeſſor's times, but were ſometimes uſed promiſcuouſly, therefore I have only aſſerted, that in Writs of Summons the word Parliament was moſt commonly uſed, when the King intended to ſummon either the Lords or Commons to ſuch an Aſſembly; which that the King did not intend to do by the Writ now in Diſpute, appears, appears from this remarkable Circumſtance, that theſe Knights were not ſummon'd to come to this Treaty with the Lords, till after all Parliamentary Buſineſs was diſpatch'd and over; for the Doctor hath there ſhew'd us from the Record of the Thirtieth of this King, that the Scutage of Forty Shillings was granted the 1ſt of June, and the Statute of Weſtminſter was enacted ~~not~~ till the 8th of July: So that Money being given, and Laws made, which are the Principal Buſineſs of all Parliaments, I can ſee nothing Parliamentary, that theſe Knights could be ſummon'd to do or adviſe about, and therefore I may very well ſuppoſe with greater probability than the Doctor's Friends can aſſert the contrary, that the Parliament having paſs'd the Statute above-mention'd on the eighth, was diſſolved on the ninth or tenth of July following, for (to give the Doctor one of his own Reaſons in his * own Words) the Knights of Shires being then great Husbands of their Time and Expences, were not very forward to undertake this Service; ſo when the Buſineſs of Parliament was over, they always deſir'd to be diſmiſs'd, to ſave their own as well as their Country's Charges. And that they ſometimes went home, when the Earls and Barons continued ſtill ſitting as a ſeparate Council, and were alſo ſometimes empower'd by the Commons to act for them, appears from thoſe Records we have left concerning the Parliament at Lincoln, which was ſummon'd to meet on the Octaves of St. Hilary, in the Twenty eighth Year of this King, where after the Lords and Commons had given the King a Fifteenth of their Moveables, in conſideration of his then granting them that the Bounds of Foreſts ſhould be ſettled according to the late Perambulations, the Commons upon their Petition were diſmiſſed; and, as appears by the * Writs for their Expences, the Parliament was diſſolved on the 29th day of January, and yet nevertheleſs the Earls and Barons continued ſtill ſitting till the end of the next Month at leaſt, during which time they drew up that remarkable Letter to the Pope, wherein they ſo ſtoutly aſſerted the King's Supreme Dominion over the Kingdom of Scotland, in Teſtimony whereof they put their Seals to it for themſelves and the whole Community of the Kingdom, that is, for the Commons as well as themſelves, as appears by the Date of it, being the 12th day of February, 1301. So likewiſe in the Sixth of Edward the Third, a Parliament was aſſembled on the 16th of March, and upon Saturday following, the King gave leave to the Knights of the Shires, the Citizens and Burgeſſes, to go home; but order'd that the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and thoſe of his Council ſhould tarry longer for the diſpatch of ſome particular Affairs in which He deſir'd their Advice.

But I confeſs that there remains one ſeeming Difficulty behind, which is, how the King came to be perſwaded by the Earls and Barons to ſummon two or three other Knights to treat with them about ſome particular matters, when the Parliament was ſitting, and when they might as well have diſpatched all Buſineſs whatſoever, in which the Advice and Conſent of the Knights of the Shires was neceſſary, ſuppoſing them (as I do) to have been already ſummon'd, at the beginning of this Parliament: I confeſs this would be a very material Objection, were not the Parliamentary Records of this King and his Succeſſor almoſt all loſt, except ſome few Fragments ments that have been collected and preſerved by Mr. Ryley in his Placita Parliamentaria; but the Gentlemen that ſhall make this Objection would do well to conſider, that if the leſs Tenants in Capite were ſummon'd to this Parliament inſtead of the Knights of Shires, the Difficulty will remain as great, if not greater, than it was before; for if they had then repreſented all their inferior Military Tenants, and that they had already given Taxes for them, and had alſo made the Statute of Weſtminſter the Third, what Parliamentary Buſineſs could there be for thoſe Knights of Shires to do, when the Doctor will not allow them to have then any hand in either of thoſe Great Affairs, of giving Money, or in making Laws: But as for the Doctor's Gueſs, that it is moſt probable (tho' it is not here abſolutely ſaid ſo) that the King was moved by the Earls, Barons, and Great Men of the Kingdom, to call theſe Knights to this Parliament; I think I may with much more colour of Reaſon affirm, that it was very improbable, they ſhould move for any ſuch thing; for if they had deſir'd it, becauſe the leſs Tenants in Capite were averſe to their Proceedings, and out-voted them at this time, when they ſat together in one Houſe, would not the calling up of two or three Commoners more out of each County (who were not Tenants in Capite) have made the Party of the leſs Tenants in Capite rather ſtronger than it was before? But if to this it be reply'd, that theſe Knights of Shires, being inferior Military Tenants, might hold their Lands of the Earls and Barons, and conſequently would be more compliant to them, than to the leſs Tenants in Capite: In return to this, I think I may ſay, it is gratis Dictum, and theſe Inferior Tenants, who were then choſen Knights of Shires, might as well have held their Eſtates of the Biſhops, Abbots and Priors, whom the Doctor doth not make to have been Parties in any ſuch Requeſt to the King; or they might alſo hold of divers of thoſe leſs Tenants in Capite themſelves, upon whom they had more dependance than upon the Temporal Lords; ſo that take it which way one will, I can ſee no Advantage gain'd either to the King or the Barons, by introducing this ſuppoſed new Order of Men into Parliament, ſo long as the Tenants in Capite are ſuppoſed by the Doctor to have ſat there (if they were there at all) to the very end of this Parliament.

Therefore to conclude, if you will accept of my Gueſs, (which may be as good as the Doctor's, concerning a matter now left ſo much in the Dark) I ſhall give it you, without putting ſo great a ſtreſs upon the Words of this Writ, which is the only thing we have to guide us. Now it appears in the very beginning of it, that the King had been particularly requeſted by the Earls, Barons, and Great Men, concerning certain matters, which He did not think fit preſently to grant, without firſt having Conference and Treaty not only with the Lords themſelves, but with Others of the Counties of the Kingdom, and therefore the King thought fit to have the Advice of two or three of the moſt Diſcreet Knights of the Shires about theſe matters, which whatever they were, could not be either about granting Money, or giving their Conſent to any Statute that was then to be made; for both thoſe things were diſpatched before ever they came up: And therefore it ſeems moſt probable, that the matter about which the King was ſo much importun'd by the Lords was concerning ſome future Alteration, or Impoſition upon the Commons, which the Knights of Shires that were then in the Parliament might either oppoſe downright, or elſe might modeſtly excuſe themſelves, as that they had not as yet receiv'd ſufficient Inſtructions from the Communities of their Counties that choſe them; upon which the King might think fit to ſummon two or three Others of the 'moſt Diſcreet and Able Knights, to appear at Weſtminſter at the 'day appointed, with full Power for themſelves and the whole Com'munity of the County aforeſaid, to adviſe and conſent to ſuch 'things, which the Earls, Barons, and Great Men aforeſaid, ſhould 'then think fit to agree upon; which however could not be done without being firſt ſufficiently inſtructed and empower'd thereunto by the ſaid Community of the Counties that ſent them; but that theſe Knights were not ſummon'd to appear in Parliament is highly probable, in that they are not order'd to appear on a day certain, which is fixed in all Parliamentary Summons, and is not to be alter'd without a new Writ of Prorogation; whereas in this now before us, the appearance of theſe Knights of Shires is left at their Diſcretion ſo ſoon as they could be elected, provided it was within three Weeks after Midſummer; and in the mean while, the Earls and Barons having ſome other Buſineſs to diſpatch with the King, might very well ſtay in Town, until theſe Knights of Shires ſhould come up to them, which however I am perſwaded, for the reaſons already given, was not till the Parliament was diſſolved. I ſhall now leave it to the Judgment of the Impartial Reader, whether this be not a more ſatisfactory Account of the reaſon and occaſion of the ſummoning theſe Knights of Shires by this extraordinary Writ of the Eighteenth of this King, than from thence to conclude, that they were then firſt ſummon'd to appear in Parliament, by a Summons in which there is not one Word ſaid of any ſuch thing, and at a day when all Parliamentary Buſineſs was over.

I have now finiſh'd one main part of my intended Deſign, in fairly ſetting down Doctor Brady's chief Arguments in his Anſwer to Mr. Petyt's Rights of the Commons, and his Animadverſions upon Mr. Atwood's Jani Anglorum facies nova, whereby the Doctor endeavours to make good againſt them, that the Commons as now repreſented were not ſummon'd to any Parliament, till the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, nor from that time till the Eighteenth of Edward the Firſt, did the Knights of Shires appear there any more, as hath been above related. But ſince the publiſhing thoſe Treatiſes, the Doctor having, I ſuppoſe, received greater Light, or having further Deſigns, thought fit to write another concerning Cities and Boroughs, ſhewing 'their Original, and whence, and from 'whom (as he ſuppoſes) they receiv'd their Liberties, Privileges, and 'Immunities; what they were, and what made and conſtituted a Free 'Burgh and Free Burgeſſes, with other things; which becauſe they are not within my intended Deſign, I purpoſely omit; however, I will give the Reader (ſince the Book is not yet very common to be had) a brief Account of the Subſtance and purport of it: The firſt fifteen or ſixteen Pages are taken up in ſhewing what a Borough is, and in what a mean State and Condition many of the Antient Boroughs of England were at the time when Domeſday-Book was made, and from thence ſhews that the King or ſome other Great Lords had moſt of the Manſion-Houſes in thoſe Boroughs, by payment of certain Rents or other Duties, and that many of them were part of the Demeſne of the King or other Great Lords, either Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal; and at the end of thoſe Inſtances from Domeſday, he draws this following Inference.

Page 16. By theſe Inſtances, which are all, he ſays, (tho' erroneouſly) that can be found in both the Domeſday-Books, that do give any Light to the underſtanding what Burghs and Burgeſſes were in the Saxon Times, and in the Reign of Edward the Confeſſor, as likewiſe afterwards in that of William the Conqueror, we find the Burgeſſes or Tradeſmen in great Towns had in thoſe times their Patrons, under whoſe Protection they traded, and paid an acknowledgment therefore; or elſe were in a more ſervile Condition, as being in Dominio Regis, vel Aliorum, altogether under the Power of the King, or Other Lords; and it ſeems to me, that then they traded not, as being in any Merchant-Gild, Society or Community, but meerly under the Liberty and Protection given them by their Lords and Patrons, who probably might have Power from the King to licence ſuch a number in this or that Port or Trading-Town.

On this Paragraph I cannot but remark, that tho' the ſervile Condition the Doctor ſpeaks of, might extend to ſome of the meaner or ſmall Boroughs he there hath picked out, yet that all the Antient Cities and Borough's of England were in this abject and ſervile State, I do not believe; nor doth it agree with the Deſcription he hath given us of a Burgh in the two firſt Pages of this Treatiſe from thoſe modern Authors that have undertaken to write of them, ſince from the ſeveral Etymologies of this Word, it appears, that they were ſo called from being places of Safety and Protection; and the Doctor affirms, 'That whether a Burgh was taken for a Place of Strength, 'or a Place of Trade, as it was guarded with the Liberties and Priviledges granted by Princes, then (and perhaps now) altogether 'neceſſary to the Advantage of Buying, Selling, and Trading, by 'which Tradeſmen quietly, and without diſturbance enjoy the Benefit of it, Burghs might truly be called Places of Safety, Protection and Priviledge. Page 3.

I will not deny, what the Doctor hath here advanced, that a Borough was much ſafer and freer, from the Protection and Priviledges granted by Princes, yet that they were before thoſe Grants Places of Safety, and likewiſe of Trade and Buſineſs, is as certain, ſince Men did of their own accord erect Cities and Towns, and encloſe them with Walls or Trenches, for their own Security; and conſequently, where there was a Concourſe of People, of courſe it produced buying and ſelling all things neceſſary for human Life, ſuch as Clothes, Victuals, Utenſils, &c. either for ready Money, or by way of Exchange. Upon which the King or other Chief Lord of ſuch Places, exacted a Toll when Standing-Markets came to be ſetled in ſuch Places; ſo that the Grants of Princes or Lords might indeed encourage, but not create ſuch Burghs or Places of Trade and Protection; and when afterwards ſuch Boroughs were made Free-

Boroughs by the King's Charter, they are at the ſame time ſuppos'd to have been Boroughs before they were made Free-Boroughs: And this appears by thoſe Inſtances the Doctor hath given us a few Pages further, when he undertakes to ſhew, why ſuch Places are called Free-Boroughs, and why the Tradeſmen in them were called Free Burgeſſes from the Charters themſelves: Thus in the Charter to Dunwich, made a Free-Borough in the Firſt of King John, ſciatis Nos conceſſiſſe & præſenti Carta confirmaſſe Burgenſibus noſtris Dunewici quod Burgum de Dunewic ſit Liberum-Burgum noſtrum. So likewiſe in a Charter in the ſecond Year of the ſame King, to Helleſton in Cornwal, the Words are the ſame, ut ſit Burgus Noſter de Helleſton, Liber Burgus, &c. and after the ſame manner King John granted to the Burgeſſes of the Town of Yarmouth in Norfolk, quod Burgenſes Noſtri de Gernemua habeant Burgum de Gernemua ad feodi firmam, in perpetuum; which Liberty (ſays the Doctor) granted to the Burghs and Burgeſſes, was a Freedom to buy and ſell freely without diſturbance; a Liberty from paying Toll, Pontage, Paſſage, Money, Leſtage, Stallage, &c. in the Mercats and Fairs in theſe Burghs, and in coming to, and going from them; and for theſe things the Burghs were called Free-Burghs, and the Burgeſſes, Free-Burgeſſes; and for nothing elſe, as is moſt evident from the Charters themſelves. Page 18, 19.

From whence we may obſerve, (let the Doctor diſguiſe it as much as he pleaſes) that every one of theſe Towns are here called Boroughs, before ever King John made them Free-Boroughs by his Charter; and conſequently as ſuch, muſt have had ſome Liberties or Priviledges, as to buying and ſelling, and other matters above ordinary Towns and Villages; or elſe there would have been no difference between the One and the Other; but what thoſe were ſhall be further enquired into by and by.

I ſhall now turn back two or three Pages, and ſhew you what the Doctor ſays concerning the City of London, in the time of William the Norman, his Words are theſe: And any Man would think the Charter of the Conqueror obtained by William Biſhop of London, looked this way, (that is, they were before in Dominio Regis, in the Power of the King or other Lords, without being in any Merchant-Gild, Society, &c.) and that this was a meer Protection, rather than a Charter, appears by the Inſtrument it ſelf. I ſhall omit the Engliſh-Saxon Original, which the Doctor hath there given us, and only ſet down the Engliſh Tranſlation. Ibid. p. 16.

> William the King Greets William the Biſhop, and Godfrey the Port-Reve, and all the Burgeſſes, (or rather Inhabitants) of the Burgh within London, French and Engliſh, Friendly. And I declare to you, that I will that you be all Law-worthy as ye were in King Edward's days, and I will that each Child be his Father's Heir, after his Father's days. And I will not that any Man command any Wrong to be done to you. God you hold, or keep.

I ſhall paſs by the Doctor's Paraphraſe and Explanation of the words of this Charter, as upon Law-worthy, and each Child being his Father's Heir, but ſhall give you the Inferences that he draws from Ibid.

thence in theſe words. From hence we may make a very probable Conjecture at the true meaning of this Protection or Charter; it is not to be doubted, but that the Burgeſſes of London had obtained of the Saxon Kings ſeveral Liberties and Immunities, amongſt which this was one, to be ſo far Free, as not to be in Dominio, or ſo obnoxious to any Lord, but that by reaſon of their State and Condition, they might be Law-worthy, that is, have the free Benefit of the Law, and had likewiſe further obtained, (if it was not then a Conſequent of their Perſonal State and Condition) that their Children ſhould be Heirs of their Lands and Goods, and in both theſe to be free from the Injuries, and unreaſonable Demands, and Power of any ſevere Lord; ſo that all the Application made by their Biſhop William, and not unlikely by Godfrey the Port-Reve, to the Conqueror for them, was, that their State and Condition might be the ſame it was in King Edward's days, that their Children might be their Heirs, and that they might in both be protected from the Injury and Violence of imperious Lords, all which by the prevalency of their Biſhop were granted; conſidering therefore by the foregoing Inſtances it is clear, that many or moſt Burgeſſes or other Burghs, were in Dominio either of the King, or ſome other Lords or Patrons, in the time of King Edward, and that the Londoners might fear the Conqueror would break in upon their Priviledges, and reduce them to the ſame Condition; this Explication ſeems to diſcover the genuine Meaning, and very Import of this Protection, or, as 'tis commonly call'd, Charter.

I here ſo far agree with the Doctor, that this Grant of King William's is not ſo properly to be call'd a Charter, as a Confirmation of the Liberties and Priviledges granted by the Engliſh-Saxon Kings; yet that it was more than a meer Protection, to be free from the Injuries, and unreaſonable Demands, and Power of any ſevere Lord, I am very confident; ſince there was no ſuch Lord that could pretend any Power over them, but the King, and He had already barr'd Himſelf from it by his Coronation-Oath, (the ſame that was taken by the Engliſh-Saxon Kings) from exerciſing any Right of Conqueſt over this Nation; but that neither the City of London, nor divers other Antient Boroughs, were from the beginning part of the King's Demeſnes taken in that Senſe as Tenants in Antient Demeſnes commonly are, for thoſe that might be taxed at the King's Pleaſure, and held their Lands by certain ſervile Tenures, I think may be very eaſily proved, ſince London, Canterbury, Wincheſter, Oxford, with other Cities and Antient Boroughs, ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament by Preſcription, and could not legally be taxed without their own Conſents; I ſay legally, becauſe I do not deny, but that King Henry the Third, and Edward the Firſt, did demand Tenths or Fifteenths, or ſuch like Taxes, without their Conſents in Parliament; but that this was an Encroachment of the Prerogative, appears by its being taken away by the Statute of the 34th of Edward the Firſt, de Tallagio non concedendo. And if London had been a Town of the King's antient Demeſn, how comes it to paſs, that it is wholly omitted in Domeſday-Book, wherein all the Towns, Boroughs, and Mannors, that were the King's Demeſnes in Edward the Confeſſor's time, are ſuppoſed to be Regiſter'd? But I ſhall now proceed to what the Doctor ſays in the next Paragraph.

* How long in moſt Burghs, very many Burgeſſes remain'd in this ſervile State, or others in a middle or Neutral State between Servitude and Freedom, I cannot ſay certainly, but do ſuppoſe, until our antient Norman Kings granted by their Charters, that there ſhould be Merchant or Trading Gilds, Communities and Societies in Burghs, and gave them Free Liberty of Trade, without paying Toll or Cuſtom any where, other than their Fee-Farm Rent in lieu of them, where that was reſerved; or to raiſe and multiply ſuch Payments by encouragment of Trade, which by the Grants of ſuch Liberties did mightily encreaſe, where the King's Bayliffs collected them.

* Id. Ib.

As to what the Doctor here undertakes to prove from Domeſday-Book, concerning the Servile and Neutral State between Servitude and Freedom of theſe Burgeſſes, till the Kings of the Norman Race emancipated them by their Charters, and gave them Free Liberty or Trade, without paying Toll or Cuſtom in the manner he here ſets down; I do not perceive his Proofs will amount to what he aſſerts, that they were in a Servile State, becauſe they paid Toll or Cuſtom to the King before ſuch Grants, as the Doctor mentions were made to them; and for this I ſhall only tranſlate what he himſelf hath ſet down in the firſt Page of his Appendix, concerning the Borough of Great-Yarmouth, which is tranſcribed from a Manuſcript Collection in the Cottonian Library, to this effect, which I ſhall here tranſlate.

'Memorandum, that the Town of Jernemu (i. e. Yarmouth) being for a great while before the Conqueſt built by the Progenitors 'of the Kings of England upon the Port or Haven of Great-Jernemu, and by reaſon of the Profit ariſing from the ſaid Haven, 'and for the bettering of the ſaid Town it was made the King's 'Borough. What follows concerning it is in little Domeſday-Book, from which I ſhall here tranſlate ſome Paſſages.

'King Edward held Jernemu, where were always ſeventy Burgeſſes, then it was worth together with the Soke of three Hundreds, 18 l. by * Taile, and the Earl's part was 9 l. by Taile, now 'the King's two Parts are 17 l. 16 s. and 4 d. White or Silver Mo'ney, and the Earl's part 10 l. of White Money. As for the Duties paid to the Sheriff, I have omitted them, becauſe it was given by Good Will, and not of Right.

* In the Latin ad numerum.

In the † next Page follows another Note, concerning this Town in the ſame Book in that Library, being to this effect. 'And you 'are to know, that the Progenitors of our Lord the King held 'the ſame Borough in their own hands, receiving all the Profits 'proceeding from the ſaid Port, to the time of King John, who 'granted the ſaid Town to the Burgeſſes of the ſame, in Fee-Farm, 'rendering to Him and his Heirs Fifty five Pounds per Annum, for 'the Payment of which, they have nothing unleſs it be the Cuſtom 'and other Profits ariſing from the ſaid Port; neither do they take 'any Cuſtoms of things bought or ſold in the Market upon Land 'at any time. Then follows another Momorandum out of the ſame Book, concerning certain Differences between the Men of Yarmouth, and Roger Fitz-Osbert, Keeper of the Mannor of Luthingland, concerning the Cuſtoms which the ſaid Roger took in the ſaid

* Ap. p. 2

Port againſt the Liberty of the Men of Jernemu, and at laſt was ſetled by an Inquiſition, which I need not here ſet down: But was alſo confirm'd by the Charters of King Henry the Third, and King Edward the Firſt, that notwithſtanding the Claims of certain Perſons there mention'd, who appear'd for the Inhabitants of Little-Yarmouth and Gorleſton in Luthingland, it is there declared on the behalf of the Burgeſſes of Great-Yarmouth and their Succeſſors, that all Goods and Merchandiſe whatſoever, whether Fiſh, or any other things which ſhould happen to be brought into the Port of the ſaid Town of Great-Yarmouth in Ships or Barks, ſhould be unloaded within the Port aforeſaid, and no otherwiſe, that ſo they may be ſold at the ſame Town of Great-Yarmouth, &c. Then follows a Charter of Edward the Third, concerning the Liberties of Great-Yarmouth, which not being to my preſent Purpoſe, I omit, and ſhall proceed to the Doctor's next * Record, which is found among thoſe of the Exchequer of Trinity Term, in the 34th Year of Edward the Firſt, and which contains a certain Proceſs before the Lord Treaſurer and Chancellor of England, the Chief Juſtice, and Juſtices of the Common-Pleas, and the Barons of the Exchequer, and ſome Others of the King's Council, upon a full Hearing between the Burgeſſes of the Town of Great-Yarmouth, and certain Perſons who appear'd on the behalf of the Towns of Gorleſton and South-Jernemuth in Luthingland, concerning the Priviledge of bringing in and unlading Goods and Merchandiſes in the Port of Great-Yarmouth, and not at any of the Places above-mention'd: The iſſue of which was, that the Burgeſſes of Great-Yarmouth obtain'd a Sentence of the King's Council againſt thoſe Perſons there mention'd, who appear'd for the ſaid Towns; the reaſon of which was, becauſe the Town of Great-Yarmouth is the King's Free Borough, and held of him in Fee-Farm at Fifty five Pounds per Annum; and alſo becauſe the ſaid Towns of Little-Yarmouth and Gorleſton, not being Boroughs, could ſhew no ſuch Liberties from the King, and therefore were ſtrictly commanded not to bring in any Ships to be unladed at the ſaid Towns, but only at the Port of Great-Yarmouth, &c.

* Ibid. p. 5.

Append. p. 7. From which Proceſs and Judgment Dr. Brady draws this Concluſion, That by this Plea and Controverſy in the Exchequer, between the Burgh of Great-Yarmouth, and the Men of Little-Yarmouth and Gorleſton in Luthingland, it appears, that Preſcription, ſeeing they were no Burghs, prevail'd not to aſſert and make good a Liberty of unlading Goods, and expoſing them to ſale in thoſe Towns, tho' it had been always done in foregoing Times. By the ſame it is alſo evident, that Liberties belonging to Free-Burghs were only to be had and obtain'd by the King's Charter, and that where they were uſed without it, they were eſteemed and judged Uſurpations, eſpecially if practiſed, and continued to the Prejudice and Damage of a Free-Burgh.

I have been the more particular in ſetting down theſe Proceedings concerning Great-Yarmouth, as being an Antient Borough by Preſcription divers Ages before King John made it a Free-Borough, and granted it to the Burgeſſes in Fee-Farm at the Rent of Five and fifty Pounds per Annum, as hath been already ſaid; and the more plainly to ſhew the difference between an Ordinary Borough, and a Free-Borough made ſo by the King's Charter, I ſhall here tranſcribe from the Doctor's Appendix, ſo much of King John's Charter to this Borough, as ſhall ſerve for my preſent purpoſe, referring the Reader to the Treatiſe it ſelf, or elſe, if he be more curious, to the Record in the Tower, to the reſt that follows,

'Johannes Dei Gratia, &c. Sciatis Nos conceſſiſſe & præſenti Carta 'noſtra confirmaſſe Burgenſibus noſtris de Gernemua quod habeant Burgum de Gernemua ad Feodi firmam in perpetuum, & quod Burgus 'ille ſit liber Burgus in perpetuum, & habeant Socam & Sacam, Tol, '& Theam & Infangenethef & Utfangenethef, & quod ipſi Burgenſes 'per totam Terram noſtram, & per omnes Portus Maris ſint quieti de 'Theoloneo, Leſtagio, Paſſagio, Paagio, Pontagio, Stallagio, & 'de Leve, & de Denegeld, & omni alia Conſuetudine, ſalva Libertate 'Civitatis London, & quod nullam Sectam Comitatuum, vel Hundredorum faciant de Tenuris infra Burgum de Gernemua. Conceſſimus 'etiam eiſdem Burgenſibus, & hac Carta Noſtra confirmavimus, quod 'nullus eorum placitet extra Burgum de Gernemua de nullo placito præter placita de tenuris exterioribus, &c.

Printed in Dr. B's Append. p. 8.

From which Charter we may obſerve, that Yarmouth was not then made a Borough, but only a Free-Borough; for as a Borough it had before the Liberty of buying Goods imported within it ſelf, only the King before this Grant received the Cuſtom of Goods brought into this Port in his own Hands, and had alſo the Socha and Sacha or liberty of holding Courts within that Precinct; all which, with the Toll of the Market, and Tryal of Thieves, in and without the Liberty, together with a Diſcharge from the other Payments and Duties there mention'd, were granted by this; but theſe Clauſes in this Charter are very remarkable, Firſt, that None of them ſhou'd do any Suit or Service to the County-Court. Secondly, that they ſhould not be bound to plead without the Borough of Yarmouth to any Plea, except ſuch as concern'd Foreign Tenures; by which Priviledges of being excuſed from appearing at the County-Court, and of holding all Pleas within themſelves, as alſo of not being bound to anſwer at Law in any Suit out of the Borough, unleſs it were for Lands lying out of it, they came to be wholly cut off and divided from the Community or Body of the County; and what the conſequence of that was, we ſhall ſhew more hereafter: So that I cannot ſee that theſe Burgeſſes of Yarmouth, or any other Town holding their Lands or Houſes within the ſame by Burgage-Tenure at a certain Rent, were any way in a more ſervile State, either as to their Perſons or Eſtates, than were other Socage-Tenants that held of the King or any other Lord either Eccleſiaſtical or Temporal: And as for their paying Toll in the Market, for what was bought and ſold in it, there is nothing ſervile in that, ſince it is a Duty payable in all Markets of England, either to the King or Chief Lords in ſuch ordinary Market-Towns and Boroughs, which, not being incorporated, have not the Toll or Duty of the Markets granted them by Charter; and as for the Cuſtoms upon Commodities, the reaſon of it is plain, that before King John's Charter, the King kept the Cuſtoms of the Port of Yarmouth in his own Hands, for the Defence of the Sea; and if they afterwards paid a Rent for it, it did not at all alter the Condition of the Service, but only as before the Charter the King receiv'd it by his Officers, ſo after it He had a Rent in dry Money inſtead of it: The like I may ſay of other Boroughs of the ſame kind.

Neither is the Doctor's Obſervation true concerning other Antient Boroughs, that they were all in a State between Servitude and Freedom, either to the King or ſome other Lord: And for this I need go no further than the next Town, the Doctor hath inſtanc'd in from Domeſday-Book, after Yarmouth; the Title is Terra Regis in Tetford, &c. where after an Eſtimate made of the Lands and Mills therein belonging to the King, and Earl, or Sheriff, it thus follows in the Doctor's Tranſlation, which I ſhall give you, correcting ſome Words; In the Burgh there were 944 Burgeſſes in the time of King Edward, and the King had all the Cuſtom they paid, or had of them all ſorts of Cuſtom: Of theſe Men there were 36, who were ſo much King Edward's Demeſne Tenants, or Vaſſals, that they could not be the Vaſſals or Tenants of any Other, without the King's Licence; but all Others could be the Tenants or Vaſſals of any Man, but ſo as their Cuſtom always remain'd to the King, except only the Hereot. Now there are 720 Burgeſſes, and 224 Houſes or Dwellings void; of theſe Burgeſſes, 21 have ſix Plough-Lands, and 60 Acres, which they held of the King, &c. from which we may obſerve, that tho' all theſe Burgeſſes held of the King, yet there were only 36 under his immediate Dominion, who could not change their Lord without the King's Licence, which all the reſt might freely do; and of theſe Burgeſſes, 21 of them had ſix Plough-Lands and 60 Acres, which they held of the King by a certain Cuſtom or Rent.

And that this Tenure was not ſervile in the time of William the Firſt, appears by what the * Doctor hath tranſcribed out of Domeſday-Book, under the Title of Norwich, which is thus Engliſhed: There are 36 French Burgeſſes in Norwich, in the New Burgh, and ſix Engliſh, and every one paid an Annual Cuſtom of five Pence, beſides their Mulcts or Forfeitures; the King had two parts of the whole, and the Earl the third part: Now, there are 41 French Burgeſſes, Vaſſals to the King and Earl, and Roger Bigot hath 50; beſides theſe there are 33 more who hold of other Lords, needleſs here to be recited, only what follows deſerves our notice; That all the Lands of the Burgeſſes (i. e. in the New-Burgh) was the Demeſne of Earl * Ralph, who granted it to the King, in common with himſelf, to † make a Burgh to be (that is the Profits of it) between him and the King; and all thoſe Lands, which are as well the Knights as Burgeſſes, pay their Rent to the King. From whence we may obſerve, that there were certain Military Tenants, who held of the King, as well as the Burgeſſes, and that by the ſame Rents and Services; which ſhews that this Tenure was not baſe nor ſervile: But the Doctor to conceal this, hath here tranſlated the Latin, viz. Terræ iſtæ tàm Militum, quàm Burgenſium reddunt Regi, ſuam Conſuetudinem, in theſe Words, and all thoſe Lands which were the Knights or Burgeſſes paid their Rent to the King; which I ſuppoſe he did, to make the Reader think, that the Knights and Burgeſſes of this City were the ſame Perſons; but that is an Impoſition upon him.

I need

† This was the Precinct about the Caſtle.

I need not go thro' all the Cities and Boroughs he hath there mention'd from Domeſday-Book, ſince he hath ſcarce ſet down any, but what held of the King by certain Rents and Cuſtoms, and none of them by any ſervile Tenures, as I can obſerve; omitting almoſt all other Boroughs (tho' likewiſe enter'd in the ſame Book) that held of the Biſhops, Abbots, or Temporal Barons, which I ſuppoſe the Doctor did to conceal from his Reader, that moſt of the Antient Cities and Boroughs of England, were none of the King's Demeſnes, neither held of Him in Capite, as the Doctor aſſerts in his Anſwer to Mr. * Petyt, concerning the Petition of the Burgeſſes of St. Albans.

But now from what has been already ſhewn, or that can be gather'd from thoſe Inſtances in Domeſday-Book, which the Doctor hath cited in this Treatiſe, I ſhall leave it to the Reader to conſider, whether this general Concluſion is to be drawn from it, that in the Reign of King Edward the Confeſſor, as likewiſe afterwards in that of William the Conqueror, the Burgeſſes of great Towns had, I ſay, in thoſe times their Patrons, under whoſe Protection they traded, and paid an acknowledgment therefore; or elſe were in a more ſervile Condition, as being altogether under the Power of the King, or other Lords: Whereas there is not a word there (as I can find) concerning theſe Burgeſſes, their manner of trading, or paying any acknowledgment for it, to thoſe to whom they own'd their Protection; nor was their being under the King's Demeſne any ſuch ſervile thing as the Doctor would have it; ſince it was no more than a bare Tenure in Soccage under a certain Rent, which not only ſuch Burgeſſes, but Knights or Military Tenants, either of the King, or Earl, did not then think it a diſparagement for them to hold by, as appears from the inſtance of thoſe Knights in Norwich, that held Lands within the Borough, paying the Cuſtoms to the King: And that Men of Quality did then hold Land within Cities and Boroughs, which belong'd to the King, doth likewiſe appear from what the Doctor hath alſo ſhewn us from Domeſday-Book, concerning the City of Canterbury, which I ſhall give you according to his Tranſlation:

In the City of Canterbury, King Edward had fifty one Burgeſſes, paying Rent, and 212 other under his Priviledge and Juriſdiction, &c. now the Burgeſſes paying Rent are 19, the Others which were 32 are dead, and yet there are 212 under the King's Priviledge and Juriſdiction. The Burgeſſes had forty five Houſes without the City, of which they themſelves had the Rent and Cuſtom; but the King had the Juriſdiction and Soke; the Burgeſſes alſo held of the King thirty three Acres of Meadow, which were toward the maintenance of their Guild. Theſe Houſes, and this Land Ranulph de Columbels now holds, and he has alſo beſides theſe eighty Acres more, which the Burgeſſes held freely of the King: For all theſe the ſame Ranulph vouched the Biſhop of Baieux for his Protector. Nothing more here concerning the Burgeſſes.

From which it plainly appears, that in the City of Canterbury there were in the time of King Edward two ſorts of Burgeſſes, the one of which paid Rent and Cuſtom to the King, and there were others over whom He had only the Duties upon their Sache and Soche, that is, their Power or Liberty of trying Cauſes within the Precinct. There were alſo Other Burgeſſes who had Houſes without the City, of which they themſelves, i. e. the Burgeſſes had their Rent and Cuſtom, but the King only the Sacam and Socam : And that the Doctor's Concluſion that follows in the ſame Paragraph is falſe, to wit, that theſe Burgeſſes traded not, as being in any Merchant-Guild, Society and Community, but meerly under the Liberty and Protection given them by their Lords and Patrons, appears by this very Paſſage before us, where it is ſaid, that the Burgeſſes of Canterbury held thoſe 33 Acres for their Guild ; Now what that can ſignifie, beſide their Trading Society or Corporation, I deſire the Doctor's Friends would inform us if they can. And further, this very Paſſage will likewiſe ſhew us, that not only ſuch Ordinary Men as Citizens and Burgeſſes, held Land within the City or Borough by the like Rent and Duties, but alſo that Men of Quality thought it no diſparagement to hold Lands by the ſame Tenure as the Burgeſſes held them, you may ſee by this Ranulf de Columbell a Norman's holding the ſame Land at the time when this Survey was made ; and beſides thoſe 33 Acres, he had 20 more, which the Burgeſſes had held before in Alodio, i. e. diſcharg'd of any Service, to the King, for all theſe Lands. But this Paſſage concerning Ranulph de Columbell, the Doctor has omitted in his Engliſh Tranſlation, I ſuppoſe, leſt his ordinary Readers ſhould know that any but meer Tradeſmen held Lands in Cities and Boroughs : And then it follows in the ſame place, that this Ranulph was under the Protection of the Biſhop of Baieux. Now if this had been ſaid of the Burgeſſes, no doubt, the Doctor would have urged it as a main Argument of their ſervile Condition, that they were fain to have the Biſhop's Protection to trade ; but this being ſaid of a Norman Gentleman, the Doctor has mollified the Expreſſion, by paraphraſing it thus, that he held theſe Lands of the Biſhop, and he was his Warrant for the poſſeſſion : But how well that Expreſſion will bear this Senſe, I will leave to the intelligent Reader to conſider.

* Treaty of Boroughs, p. 17.

I ſhall now proceed to what the * Doctor ſays concerning the Original of Cities and Boroughs in France, and he cites Du Freſne's Gloſſary, who there ſays, ‘ That the Kings of France erected theſe Communities to check the Inſolencies of their Great Vaſſals, and to protect his People from their over-grown Dominion and extravagant Power, that they reputed ſuch Cities and Towns their own, where there were ſuch Communities ; which I ſhall not at all concern my ſelf about, ſince it plainly appears by what follows in this Author, that thoſe Places were Cities or Great Corporate Towns ; for but a little farther, the Doctor ſays from him, that the ‘ chief things which conſtituted a Community, were a Mayor, Eſchevins or Aldermen, a Society, Fraternity, or Common Council, out of which they were to be choſen, a Bell-Fry, and Bell to call them together to publick Meetings, a Common Seal and Juriſdiction. All theſe do indeed belong to Cities and Towns Corporate, but do no ways concern our Ordinary Boroughs, which are, and ever were quite different things from Cities and Corporations ; for every Body knows that all Cities are Boroughs, but not vice verſa, all Boroughs are not Cities, or Towns Corporate ; tho' the Doctor the better to ſerve his preſent turn, doth all he can to make all Ordinary Boroughs to have been at firſt incorporated by the Charters of former Kings ; but what Authority he hath for this his ſo ſingular Opinion ſhall be conſider'd hereafter.

From France the * Doctor comes over to Scotland, and ſays, that about the ſame time that theſe Communities firſt began to be frequent in France, the Laws and Cuſtoms of the Burghs of Scotland were publiſhed by King David the Firſt, who began his Reign A. D. 1124, and was cotemporary to our Henry the Firſt, and King Stephen; but this makes againſt the Doctor's Notion, and ſhews, that the Boroughs of Scotland were not then newly erected, but were far more antient, becauſe there muſt have been Boroughs long before there could be Laws made to regulate them; and Cuſtoms are only ſuch, as muſt have continued beyond time of memory.

But I ſhall further obſerve, concerning the Boroughs of Scotland, that they have always ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament, as the Doctor himſelf acknowledges in his Anſwer to Mr. † Petyt; And as for the Great Cities or Communities of France, the French Hiſtorians and Antiquaries allow, that they have from their firſt Original ſent Deputies to the Antient Aſſemblies of Eſtates; but England being (in the Doctor's Opinion) a Conquered Kingdom, is not to be allow'd thoſe Priviledges with France and Scotland, ſo that no Cities nor Boroughs here (if he may be credited) did ever, but once, ſend Repreſentatives to Parliament, before the latter end of Edward the Firſt.

I ſhall now proceed to the reſt of what the Doctor there aſſerts, concerning the Original of Priviledges to Boroughs, of which he ſays thus: It wants not Probability, (tho' it manifeſtly appears not) that William Rufus, Henry the Firſt, and King Stephen, being all Uſurpers, granted large Immunities to Burghs, to ſecure them to their Party; and by the time that Glanvil wrote, which was in the Reign of Henry the Second, Burghs had ſuch great Priviledges, as that if a Bondman or Servant remained in a Burgh, as a Burgeſs or Member of it, a Year and a Day, he was by that very reſidence made Free; and ſo it was in Scotland, he was always free and enjoy'd the Liberty of the Burgh, if he were able to buy a Burgage-Tenure, and his Lord claim'd him not within a Year and a Day: And then he cites the Law made by King David about it to the ſame effect, and which indeed rather makes againſt the Doctor's Opinion. For it cannot be ſuppos'd, that the Scots borrowed their Laws concerning their Boroughs immediately from England, ſo ſoon almoſt as they were made here; and therefore it is moſt likely, that this Cuſtom concerning the Enfranchiſement of Bondmen, was practiſed in the Boroughs of both Kingdoms for a long time before, and did not proceed from the Grant or Charter of thoſe Uſurping Kings he mentions: And ſo likewiſe the Doctor's next Aſſertion wants probability, to wit, that the Immunities granted to Boroughs, proceeded from thoſe Uſurpers he mentions, ſince he can ſhew us no Authority for what he ſays; but indeed if thoſe Kings of the Norman Race granted any ſuch Priviledges at all, it muſt have been by ſuch Uſurpers as the Doctor names, ſince of the eight firſt Kings after the Conqueſt, there was but One of them, that had a Title to the Crown by Inheritance, when He firſt took poſſeſſion of it. And I confeſs this is a very notable proof of the Doctor's, to make out that theſe Grants were made by Uſurpers, when the two moſt antient Authorities that he hath brought of the Grants of thoſe Kings to any Boroughs or Towns Corporate, is the Charter of Henry the Second to the Burgeſſes of Wallingford, whereby He granted them many large Priviledges for the Services they had done Him againſt King Stephen in recovering his Hereditary Right: And Wincheſter and Oxon had alſo Charters from the ſame King; and Portſmouth had another from King Richard the Firſt, whereby He granted them a Fair and a Market, and theſe two Princes were the only ones of Eight, who could make any colourable Claim to an Hereditary Right, at the time of their Coronations.

But the main Error that runs thro' this Author's Treatiſe, is, in confounding Boroughs with Free-Boroughs, and both of them with thoſe Guilds or Communities, that were only erected in Towns-Corporate, as if they had been all one and the ſame; and for this the * Doctor cites King John's Charter to Hertlepool, in the Biſhoprick of Durham, Sciatis Nos conceſſiſſe & hac præſenti Charta Noſtra confirmaſſe hominibus de Hertlepool, quod ſint Liberi Burgenſes, &c. which Liberty (ſays he) granted to the Burghs and Burgeſſes (for all Inhabitants of Burghs were not ſuch) was a Freedom to buy and ſell freely without diſturbance, a Liberty from paying Toll, Pontage, Paſſage-money, Leſtage, Stallage, in the Mercates and Fairs in theſe Burghs, and in coming to, and going from them; and for theſe things, the Burghs were called Free-Burghs, and the Inhabitants Free-Burgeſſes, and for nothing elſe, as is moſt evident from the Charters themſelves: But the Doctor carries that too far, for there was certainly a Liberty of buying and ſelling in the Mercates of Ordinary Boroughs, (paying Toll and other Duties) before ever they were made Free-Boroughs, or the Inhabitants called Free-Burgeſſes.

But further to prove that the Guild, or Corporation erected by the King's Charter in Towns-Corporate, was the ſame thing with a Free-Borough, the † Doctor cites a Law of King David abovemention'd, That All his Burgeſſes ſhould be free to buy and ſell in his whole Kingdom, as well by Land as by Water, and to make their advantage without diſturbance, upon pain of forfeiture to ſuch as diſturbed them; and in the Statutes of King William, Chap. 35. He alſo decreed, That the Merchants of the Kingdom ſhould have their Merchant-Guild peaceably, with the Liberty of buying and ſelling every where, within the Liberties of their Burghs; ſo that every one be content with his Liberty, and none ſhould uſurp the Liberty of another, &c. and from thence the Doctor makes a learned Remark, that by underſtanding wherein their Liberty conſiſted, we come to know what Men the Burgeſſes were, to wit, Buyers and Sellers, Ordinary and Common Tradeſmen, (then called Merchants) ſuch as are commonly found in ordinary Inland Burghs and Mercate Towns, ſuch as frequent Fairs and Markets. But he need not have gone ſo far as the Laws of King William for this great diſcovery; for had he diſcourſed with any travelling Scotch Pedlar, he could have inform'd him, that every ordinary Tradeſman in Scotland is called a Merchant at this day; and that ſuch Tradeſmen in England were alſo called Merchants in former times, I ſhall not deny, ſince the Authorities he brings for it are plain plain enough. But to what purpoſe doth this Author cite the antient Laws in Scotland concerning their Boroughs, as if that could inſtruct us, what made a Borough in England? ſince all the Scotch Boroughs (as I am credibly informed) are a ſort of Towns Corporate, having a Provoſt, with a Corporation govern'd by Bayliffs, who are like our Aldermen, and have alſo a Guild, or Company of Merchants and Traders, under certain Laws or Rules; but this is nothing to our Boroughs, much leſs to our Free-Boroughs in England, many of which have neither Mayors, Bayliffs, nor Aldermen, nor yet any ſet number of Burgeſſes inſtead of them; neither do they ſend Members to Parliament, becauſe they are ſuch Communities or Corporations, as the Doctor will have it; ſince there are ſeveral Towns Corporate made ſo by the King's Letters Patents in modern times, which nevertheleſs do not ſend any Burgeſſes to Parliament; and tho' ſome of them may have the liberty of ſending two, and ſome one Burgeſs to Parliament, yet that is no effect of their being a Corporation, but becauſe that Priviledge is particularly granted in the Charter it ſelf; but there are not any of this kind more antient than the Reign of King Edward the Fourth, before which time, there is not to be found any Clauſe in a Charter granted to an ordinary Market Town, which when it was made a Corporation, gave it a Priviledge of ſending One or Two Burgeſſes to Parliament. But to proceed:

The Doctor's main Spleen being againſt the City of London, which he will not have to be a Corporation until the beginning of Richard the Firſt, I ſhall give you his Account of it, and then examine what he ſays: In the Year 1191, which was the Second of Richard the Firſt, John Earl of Moreton, the Archbiſhop of Rouen, and all the Biſhops, Earls, and Barons, with the Citizens of London, met in St. Paul's Church-yard on the 11th of October, and there depoſed the Chancellor William Longchamp, Biſhop of Ely, the King being then in the Holy Land, and made Walter Archbiſhop of Rouen, Chancellor in his ſtead; and the ſame day the ſaid Earl and Archbiſhop, and other the King's Juſtices, granted to the Citizens of London, to have their Community. And the ſame Year the Earl of Moreton, and the Archbiſhop, and almoſt all the Biſhops and Earls and Barons of the Kingdom did ſwear, firmly and ſteadfaſtly to defend and preſerve that Community, ſo long as it pleaſed the King.

This Community, which was thus granted to the Citizens, was a ſelect number, for the better management of the Affairs of the City; for no doubt but the Citizens met promiſcuouſly in St. Paul's Church-yard, and to avoid Confuſion for the future, it was deſired by themſelves, and thought requiſite by the Earl of Moreton, the Chancellor, and King's Juſtices, that they ſhould have ſuch an Eſtabliſhment, the better to aſſiſt them in their ſeditious Practices, and for the greater advantage of the Citizens; otherwiſe, why ſhould the Citizens deſire it, and the Nobility be importun'd to ſwear the defence of it? Ibid.

But notwithſtanding the Doctor's Confidence, that the City of London was no Corporation before that time, yet in the next Paragraph he ſeems to doubt it, as appears by what follows: Whether this Ibid.

this Community mention'd by Hoveden was the Firſt, that was granted to London, or whether they had one before, and was diſſolved by Henry the Second for their conſtant Rebellion againſt his Mother Maud the Empreſs and Himſelf, and never reſtored until this time, I know not: They had not a Mayor indeed until the Firſt of Richard the Firſt, the Year before this, and perhaps might not have a Community until the Second of his Reign. And truly the Doctor hath very good reaſon to doubt it, for tho' they had not a Mayor until the Firſt of Richard the Firſt, yet that they were a Community or Corporation long before that time, (however it became now to be forfeited or ſuſpended) appears by their Antient Charters and other Records: And tho' the Doctor in his Appendix to this Treatiſe hath given us divers Charters to this City from Henry the Firſt, Henry the Second, and Richard the Firſt, yet there is not any thing in them, that mentions the making them a Community or Corporation; and in the moſt antient of them, viz. that of Henry the Firſt, London is there called a City, and its Inhabitants Citizens, which Titles they would not have had, if they were not at that time a Corporation with a Gilda Mercatoria, which the Doctor ſuppoſes to be neceſſary to all Cities and Towns of Trade, and in the firſt of theſe Charters from King Henry the Firſt, is contain'd a Grant to the Citizens of London, of the whole County of Middleſex to be held in Fee-Farm for 300 l. per Annum, with a Priviledge that the Citizens ſhould name what Sheriff they would from among themſelves, and likewiſe what Juſticiary they would, to hold the Pleas of the Crown, and that no other Juſticiary ſhall be over the Men of London, nor ſhall the Citizens plead without the Walls of the City; and they ſhall be quit from Schot and Lot and Danegeld, with other Priviledges too long to be here recited; only it therein plainly appears, that before this Charter they had two Courts, one called the Huſtings, the other the Folkeſmot; and it is alſo appointed, that the Huſtings ſhall ſit once in the Week: Now this being the Sheriffs of London's Court, and one of the moſt antient of England, as appears by the Saxon derivation of it, (which the Doctor hath there given us at the bottom of the Margin) I leave it to the Judgment of the impartial Reader, whether there can be a more evident Proof from any Charter to a City or Borough of their being a Community or Corporation, than their having Sheriffs of their own, with the Government of a whole County committed to them, and the Power to appoint a Juſtice of their Own, and to hold Pleas in all ſorts of Actions, whether Civil or Criminal: And whoever will take the pains to peruſe the reſt of the Charters to this City, which the * Doctor hath tranſcribed into his Appendix, will find, that they only contain a Confirmation of their former Liberties and Priviledges, without any mention of their being thereby made a New Corporation or Community. The like I may ſay for the antient Charters granted to Wincheſter, Norwich, Lincoln, and other antient Cities, which do ſuppoſe, and not make them to have been Communities or Corporations, or Free-Boroughs; particularly that of † Richard the Firſt to Wincheſter, begins with this remarkable paſſage.

nullus eorum placitet extra muros Civitatis Wintoniæ de ullo placito præter placita de tenuris exterioribus, exceptis Monetariis & Miniſtris Noſtris, &c. whereby it appears, that the Community of Wincheſter had a Gilda Mercatoria long before this Charter, and that (without doubt) by the Grant of ſome of the Engliſh-Saxon Kings; ſince there is no Charter to be found more antient than this to that City, from any of the Kings of the Norman Race. But what the Doctor ſays further concerning London having a Community or Corporation in the time of Edward the Firſt, and the manner of their then chuſing their Mayor and Common Council Men, is not my buſineſs to examine.

I ſhall now proceed to what he hath further ſaid, to explain what was meant by the Community or Communalty of a Borough or City, which he doth in theſe Words:

* Yet further to make it clear, beyond all exception, what the Community or Communalty of a Burgh or City was, I will add a Clauſe in a Private Act of Parliament, made for the Eſtabliſhment of certain Rents and other matters between the Burgh of Plymouth, and the Prior and Convent of Plympton, in the time of King Edward the Fourth, in theſe Engliſh Words, as 'tis to be found upon the Parliament-Roll, 4 Ed. 4. M. 38, 39. and if the ſayd Yearly Rent of 29 l. 6 s. 8 d. be behind in part, or in all, not payd to the ſame Priour of Plympton, and Covent, and to their Succeſſors in the ſame Priorye by fifteen days next after Eny of the ſaid Feſts of Payment, that then it be Leful unto the ſame Priour and Covent and their Succeſſours, and to their Officers and Miniſters to diſtreyne in the ſaid Borough, and in name of Diſtreſſe to take all the Goods and Catalles of the ſaid Maire, and Communalte and of all Other Burgeis of the ſame Borough, and of all Other Perſons reſident, and dwelling in the ſame Borough, and Precinct of the ſame, and in every parcel thereof. Here we find the Mayor and Commonalty of Plymouth a ſelect number, and diſtinct from all Other Burgeſſes of that Burgh, and all other Perſons reſident and dwelling within the ſame. And what the Mayor and Commonalty of this Burgh were, other than the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, or the Mayor and Chief Burgeſſes, which were the governing part of the Town, let any one, that can, tell me.

* In the Treat. Ib. p. 24.

At the end of the 38 Membrane, and beginning of the 39.

I ſhall not here diſpute, what is to be underſtood by the word Communalty in a Borough incorporated by Charter, as this is; but I am very confident the Doctor is miſtaken in making this word ſo to be underſtood in thoſe Boroughs, which far the greater number of them were never incorporated at all; for in thoſe, the word Communalty can by no means be underſtood of a ſelect number, and diſtinct from all the other Burgeſſes of that Burgh; ſince all the Burgeſſes of it, who have Votes in the Election of Members to Parliament, are alike Part of the Communalty of the Borough, and indeed this is but a needleſs Criticiſm of the Doctor's, ariſing from the too nice wording of this Agreement between the Town of Plymouth and the Prior of Plympton; for who doth not know, that underſtands any thing of the difference between a Town-Corporate, and a Borough by Preſcription, ſuch as Oxford, Woodſtock, &c. that notwithſtanding the choice of the Mayor and Aldermen is wholy in the Common-Council, Council, yet the Election of Burgeſſes to ſerve in Parliament is made by all the Freemen of thoſe Towns Corporate ? and in other places by all the Burgeſſes, who have ſuch Houſes within the Borough, as are of Borough-Tenure, according to the ſeveral Cuſtoms of thoſe Borough-Towns, which I grant are very different, and which I could wiſh, I might ſee all reduced to one uniform Order or Method by Act of Parliament, for the avoiding of Quarrels at Elections, and to ſave the Houſe of Commons a great deal of trouble, beſides the Advantage ſeveral Factions lay hold of, whenever they have it in their Power to determine, as they pleaſe, concerning them; but this only by the bye. However, ſince the Doctor hath undertaken to give us ſome further Light concerning Parliamentary-Boroughs, I ſhall give you his Opinion concerning them, as it follows in the ſame Page.

Id. 24. From treating of the Conſtitution of Burghs, and ſhewing what they, and the Burgeſſes antiently were, and of what Value and Eſtimation in the Nation, I ſhall proceed to ſhew what the Parliament-Burghs were, and when, and for what Cauſe at firſt they ſent Repreſentatives to Parliament.

Ibid. In the Reigns of King John and Henry the Third, we do not find any Citizens or Burgeſſes in Great Councils, or Parliaments, unleſs they were in that of the Forty ninth of Henry the Third, at which time, the Citizens of York and Lincoln, and other Burghs of England, were written unto, to ſend two Citizens and two Burgeſſes according to the Form of the Writ directed to the Biſhop of Durham, and for this he refers us back to his Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, f. 137. A. f. 140. B.

* Ibid. The main Cauſe of the Citizens and Burgeſſes being firſt ſummon'd to Parliament.

* The main Cauſe of their being firſt ſummon'd to Parliament, was, to give their Conſent to Taxes propounded to, or impos'd upon them; before that time, in the Reigns of thoſe two Kings, they were Talliated or paid Tallage according to the Impoſition upon them, or Acceptance of what they offered by the King's Officers or Juſtices, as alſo in the time of Edward the Firſt, until after the Thirty fourth Year of his Reign, and this he thinks to be manifeſtly proved in ~~my~~ Animadverſions upon a Book called Jani Anglorum Facies nova, fol. 178, 179, 180, and further appears in Ryley's Placita Parliamentaria, in the Thirty third of this King, fol. 259. 264, 265. 275, 276. Altho' ſeveral Years before, Citizens and Burgeſſes were ſummon'd to Parliament, and there gave their Conſent to the raiſing and paying of Taxes. In the Thirty ſecond Year of his Reign, He cauſed a Talliage without Common Conſent to be aſſeſſed by Commiſſioners in all his Cities, Burghs and Demeſnes, in every County of England, either by Heads (Capitatim) or in common, and gave particular direction that the Talliage of Norwich ſhould be aſſeſſed at Four hundred Pounds.

I ſhall not ſay much to what the Doctor hath here laid down, becauſe the greateſt part of it is anſwered already in what I have before brought to the Doctor's Arguments, to prove, that No Knights of Shires were ſummon'd before the time he laſt mentions; and as for the reaſon he gives, why the Citizens and Burgeſſes came afterwards to be ſummon'd in this King's Reign, becauſe they ſhould give their Conſent in Taxes propounded to, or impos'd upon them, and that before this time they were Talliated according to the Impoſition laid upon them, &c. All this, in my Opinion, utterly deſtroys the Reaſon he hath given; for if the King could have legally Taxed all the Cities and Boroughs of England at his own Pleaſure, not only before they ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament, but alſo after they had their Repreſentatives there, they were obliged to grant the King whatever Aid He demanded: I cannot ſee then what reaſon there could be, to make them ſend Members to Parliament at all, ſince they could but have paid what He pleas'd to impoſe, without putting Himſelf to ſo much needleſs Trouble of ſummoning, or them to the Charges of ſending up their Members: But I ſhall ſay more to this Point by and by.

Perhaps thoſe of the Doctor's Opinion, will ſay, in Anſwer to this, That tho' the King had formerly done ſo, and might have done it again if He pleas'd, yet that He had rather receive thoſe Aids or Taxes from the voluntary Conceſſion of his Subjects, than to exact them of them whether they would or not; but to this it may be reply'd, That it would be a good Anſwer, had not the Doctor aſſerted this Power of Talliating all the Cities and Boroughs in England, as his antient and undoubted Right and Prerogative, and that even after the Citizens and Burgeſſes were ſummon'd to Parliament, they were ſtill obliged to grant whatſoever Sum the King ſhould think fit to impoſe upon them; for that Grant can never be voluntary, when there is no Liberty left to refuſe, if they ſhould think fit; beſides, if this had been the King's antient and undoubted Right, the Cities and Boroughs of England had no more reaſon to be diſcontented at it, than the Cities and Towns of France have at this Day, to pay whatſoever Talliage it pleaſes their King to impoſe upon them; and tho' it may be paid with great regret, yet that is all one, ſince Oderint dum Metuunt is the Maxim of that ſort of Government, which the Doctor ſeems by his Treatiſe chiefly to deſign to advance.

But, indeed, what he hath ſaid in Anſwer to Mr. Atwood's Jani Anglorum, &c. doth not make out what he hath here aſſerted. yet it cannot be deny'd, that he is herein ſo far in the right, that the Kings of England before the Statute, de Tallagio non concedendo, often Talliated their own private Demeſns, that is, ſuch Lands as held immediately of the King upon Payment of certain Rents, or performing certain Duties or Services in kind; and there was ſome reaſon for this, ſince the Tenants of thoſe Lands being diſcharged by their Tenure, from any Suit or Service at the County-Court, had nothing to do in the Election of Knights of Shires, and conſequently could have no Repreſentatives in Parliament to grant Taxes for them; and beſides all this, theſe Tenants not holding by Military Service, but meer Soccage-Tenure, were not obliged to ſerve the King with their Perſons or Eſtates in any Foreign War, either in France, Scotland, or Wales; but only in caſe of an Invaſion by Foreign Enemies, or of ſome Inſurrection or Rebellion within the Realm; and therefore it was but reaſonable, that theſe Tenants in Antient Demeſne, enjoying ſuch great Priviledges, ſhould contribute to the Publick Neceſſities of the King and Kingdom as well as the reſt of the Nation; and ſince they could not grant this in Parliament, it was left to the King as their Supreme Lord, to Tax them according to the ſame Proportion as the reſt of the People were obliged to pay Him, and whenever ſuch a general Tax was laid upon them, it was always (or at leaſt for the moſt part) when the whole Kingdom was Taxed by Authority of Parliament: And if it were done at any other time, it was look'd upon as a Grievance and Encroachment of the Prerogative. But preſently after the Statute above-mention'd, De Tallagio non concedendo, (when all ſorts of Tallages or Taxes whatſoever, were for the future to be only granted by the King and Parliament) we find that in the next Parliament after that wherein this Statute was made, being the 34*th* Year of this King, not only the Cities and Boroughs, but the Tenants of the King's Antient Demeſns, by certain Repreſentatives of their own Chooſing, (ſince they could not all appear in Perſon themſelves) granted the King a Twentieth Part of their Goods for the making his Son a Knight, and the Defence of Scotland againſt Robert Bruce, as appears by a * Record in the Exchequer, which is alſo cited by the Doctor in this very Treatiſe. And theſe Tenants in Antient Demeſne (as he himſelf acknowledges) continued to be often mention'd, as Granters of their Shares of all Taxes upon Moveable Goods, till after the 8*th* Year of K. Edward, when the Eſtabliſhment of Taxes upon Perſonal Eſtates became certain, and the way and manner of levying them was changed, the Tenants in Antient Demeſne were no longer mention'd in the Commiſſions to the Taxors and Collectors, as Granters of thoſe Taxes; ſo that there now remain Two Queſtions in Diſpute between the Doctor, and thoſe of the contrary Opinion: The Firſt is, Whether King Edward the Firſt, or any of his Predeceſſors, Talliated all the Cities and Boroughs in England, as his, or their Antient Demeſnes? The Second is, Whether or no Cities or Boroughs which were not his Antient Demeſne, had any Right to ſend Citizens or Burgeſſes to Parliament, but only as they were made Free-Cities or Free-Boroughs by the King's Charter? As to the Firſt of theſe, the Doctor is certainly miſtaken; ſince the greater Part of the Antient Cities and Boroughs in England, cannot be proved either from Doome's-Day-Book, or any other Record to be Part of the King's Antient Demeſne; nor doth the Doctor either in his Anſwer to Mr. Atwood's Jani Anglorum, or in this Place now before us, prove any more, than that King Henry the Third, and Edward the Firſt, his Son, Talliated ſuch Cities and Towns as held in Antient Demeſne only; nor did the King pretend to Talliate London any otherwiſe: But concerning His Rght to do this, we ſhall ſpeak further by and by. In the mean while I deſire the Reader would conſult the * Doctor's Liſt which he hath given from Doome's-Day-Book, and other Records, of the preſent Boroughs that were Antient Demeſne, and there he will find None of the Cities, and not a Third Part of the Antient Boroughs of England, to have been the Antient Demeſne of the Crown; and if ſo, the Doctor's general Propoſition is falſe, which he hath already ſo poſitively laid down, That before the 23d of Edward the Firſt, all the Cities and Boroughs in England were Talliated, or paid Tallage, as the King's Demeſnes, according to the Impoſitions laid upon them, or Acceptance of what they offer'd the King's Officers or Juſtices;

I think this is ſufficient at preſent to be ſaid as to the firſt point; and as for the Second, concerning the Rights and Priviledges of Free-Boroughs, their ſending Members to Parliament, ſhall be conſider'd when we come to thoſe Pages in the Doctor's Treatiſe, which particularly ſpeak concerning them.

I ſhall therefore proceed to examine the * Doctor's next Aſſertion, viz. that the firſt time we find any Citizens or Burgeſſes ſummon'd to Parliament, was in the 23*d* Year of Edward the Firſt, according to the Tenor of the * Writ which there follows; for which I ſhall refer you to the Tranſcript here publiſhed of it, as alſo in the Anſwer to † Mr. Petyt's Rights of the Commons, which ſince it is no more than an ordinary Writ of Summons to Parliament in the uſual Form, I need recite no more of it, than that it was firſt held on the Sunday after the Feaſt of St. Martin, and the Sheriff of Northamptonſhire is "thereby required to cauſe to be choſen and come to Weſtminſter "at the Day appointed, Two Knights of the County aforeſaid, and "the ſaid Citizens and Burgeſſes, to have the ſame Power ſeparately, "from them, for themſelves, and the Communities of Cities and Burghs, "then to do in the Premiſes what ſhall be ordain'd by the Common-Council of the ſame. This is dated at Canterbury the 3*d* of October.

This Parliament (ſays the * Doctor) did not meet on the Sunday after St. Martin, but was prorogu'd before their meeting, to the Sunday next before St. Andrew the Apoſtle, which is the 30*th* of November, and all the Treating, Ordaining, and Doing in this Parliament, was only to Grant, and Conſent to raiſe ſuch Supplies as the King demanded, as will afterward appear. But the Doctor is too bold in this laſt Aſſertion, for the Rolls of this Parliament being loſt, he cannot tell what might be treated of, or ordain'd in it, beſides the granting the King an Aid; and there were many Parliaments call'd in thoſe Times, when no Statutes were made; and yet it would be very bold to aſſert, without firſt conſulting the Rolls, that nothing elſe was treated of or done, beſides giving Money. But to proceed to the Doctor's next Paragraph.

* Ibid p. 26.

* The not finding any Citizens or Burgeſſes ſummon'd by former Writs directed to Sheriffs, nor particular Writs directed to the Mayors, Bayliffs, or Chief Officers of Cities and Burghs before this (except that in the 49*th* of Henry the Third) might be a ſufficient Proof, that theſe were the Firſt Summons of Citizens or Burgeſſes to Parliament. But to clear this Point beyond all Doubt and Cavil, we muſt look back to the 18*th* of this King, and ſee what the Stile of Parliaments was, between that time and this.

* Ibid.

And then the Doctor proceeds to recite the Writ of the 18*th* of this King, which he found in a Bundle of Writs directed to the Sheriffs of ſeveral, or moſt, of the Counties of England, and they are (ſays he) the antienteſt extant, or perhaps that ever were (except, as above, he means thoſe of the 49*th* of Henry the Third) by which Two or Three Knights were directed to be choſen for each County; but no Citizens or Burgeſſes. And accordingly Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge and Huntington Shires, and Cumberland, return'd each of them Three Knights, with Manucaptors for their Appearance; all other Counties but Two each, &c.

* Retorn. Parl. 18. Edw. I.

As to the Firſt of the Doctor's Arguments to prove that the Cities and Boroughs ſent no Repreſentatives to Parliament till this Year, I have in effect anſwered it already, when the like Reaſon was made uſe of to prove that there were no Commons ſummon'd until the 49*th* of Henry the Third. And I muſt once more ask the Gentlemen of this Opinion, ſince the Writs of Summons (as I have ſaid already) to the Biſhops and Temporal Lords, as well as to the Commons, from the Year laſt mentioned, to the 23*d* of this King, are all loſt, how they can prove that there were any ſuch Perſons preſent, in any of the Parliaments that were ſummon'd from that time to this? If they ſay, that tho' thoſe Writs of Summons are loſt, yet it evidently appears from Records, Titles to Statutes, and the Hiſtories of thoſe Times, that the Biſhops and Peers were preſent in all Great Councils and Parliaments, during that time, but that the like Teſtimonies cannot be produced on the behalf of the Commons. To this I reply, That this is aſſerted without any good Ground, ſince, I hope, I have already evinced the contrary in the firſt Part of this Diſcourſe, and that from the ſame Teſtimonies, that thoſe of the Doctor's Opinion can pretend to produce; but whether they are convincing or not, muſt be left to the Judgment of the impartial Reader: Yet however, ſo much is plain, that this Reaſon ſignifies nothing, that theſe Two Writs laſt mention'd, were the firſt that were ever iſſued out for the ſummoning of Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes to Parliament; and to clear this, let us for once ſuppoſe, that the Doctor had never found this looſe Writ of the 18*th* of Edward the Firſt, for the ſummoning thoſe Two or Three Knights to a Great Council or Parliament (call it which you pleaſe) might he not then as well have aſſerted, that there were not any Commons in Parliament, from the 49*th* of Henry the Third, to this of the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt, whereby the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, are all alike ſummon'd.

And as for the Doctor's other Argument, from this very Writ of the 18*th* of this King, wherein no Citizens and Burgeſſes are at all mention'd, I think I have with greater Probability made it clear (than he hath done the contrary) that this was no Summons to a Parliament; nor can it be proved, that the like Writs were ſent to all, or moſt of the Counties in England: He ſays indeed, That they were to ſeveral, or moſt of them, but herein he is mightily miſtaken; for upon Examination, I can find no ſuch Writs ſent but to Twenty five of them, which is far ſhort of all the Counties of England, as it ought to have been, to have made a full Repreſentative of the whole Community of other Military Tenants, whom only the Doctor will allow to have been repreſented by them: And if his Friends ſhall here object that there might have been more Writs in this Bundle, to the reſt of the Counties, which are now loſt, why is not that as good a Plea for the loſs of all Writs, for electing any Commons to Parliament before this Time? And whereas the Doctor makes uſe of this as an Argument, that there were no Citizens and Burgeſſes ſummon'd to Parliament, till the time he aſſigns, becauſe there are none mention'd in that of the 18*th* of this King, it is ſo far from paſſing with me for a good Reaſon, that it rather ſeems a very bad one for him, and proves what I have aſſerted, ſerted, That becauſe no Citizens and Burgeſſes were order'd to be ſummon'd by this Writ, therefore it was not a Summons to a Parliament, but to a Colloquy or Treaty of Two or Three Knights of certain Shires, to treat with the Earls and Barons only, no Biſhops nor Abbots being therein mentioned.

I ſhall now proceed to the reſt of the Doctor's Obſervations upon this Parliament in the 18th of this King, which (* if the Doctor may be believed) gave the King a Fifteenth Part of their Moveable Goods, as appears by the account upon the * Great Roll in the 23*d* Year of this King, eſpecially in the two laſt Rolls thereof; the Title of that Account, wherein we alſo have the Style of that Parliament, runs thus.

* Ibid.

* In Officio Pipæ apud Weſtmonaſt.

The Account of the Fifteenth granted to the King in his Eighteenth Year, by the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and All Others of the Kingdom aſſeſ'd, collected, and levied by Divers Collectors in ſeveral Counties, in the ſame Eighteenth Year. This is the very ſame Style which was uſed in the Reigns of King John and Henry the Third, before the Commons or Communities of Counties, were repreſented by Knights choſen by them: And 'tis here further to be noted, that the Two or Three Knights, choſen for the Community of the County, did repreſent them, and according to the Form of the Writ, conſulted and conſented to a Fifteenth for them, which are here called the Omnes Alii de Regno, and were Military Tenants in Capite of the Ordinary Rank, but of the ſame Order with the Knights. * In the Cheque-Roll of the 19*th* of Edward the Firſt, there is the Form of a Writ to appoint Taxors and Collectors of this Fifteenth in theſe Words: Edward by the Grace of God, &c. to the Knights, Freemen, and whole Community of Counties (none named) &c. Greeting, whereas the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and All Others of our Kingdom, now, as at other times, to Us and our Progenitors, have freely granted a Fifteenth Part of all their Moveable Goods, &c. Witneſs our ſelf at King's-Clipton, the 22*d* of September in the Eighteenth Year of our Reign. Here we find the ſame Perſons only granted this Fifteenth, who were wont to grant the ſame manner of Taxes in the Times of his Progenitors. This, tho' the Doctor thinks it illuſtrates what went before, yet rather confounds it, as I ſhall ſhew farther by and by.

Ibid.

* Ibid. p. 27. In the Cuſtody of the King's Remembrancer, Inter Communia de Term. S. Mich. Rot. or n. 5.

In the mean while I ſhall look back and make ſome Animadverſions upon what, I think, the Doctor hath very inconſideratly laid down: In the Firſt Place, albeit I do not deny, that the King had a Fifteenth given Him this Year in Parliament; yet that this was done in that very Parliament which the Dr. mentions in his * Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, which met on the Firſt of June this Year, and gave the King Forty Shillings of every Knight's Fee, for the Marriage of his Eldeſt Daughter, I can ſcarce believe; for we do not find, that the Parliaments of thoſe Times were wont to grant Two ſuch Great Taxes, the one upon Goods and the other upon Lands, in one and the ſame Seſſion of Parliament. And notwithſtanding the Doctor obſerves, that this Grant of a Fifteenth made in the very ſame Style as was uſed in the Reigns of King John and Henry the Third, before ever he allows the Commons or Community of Counties to be repreſented by Knights choſen by themſelves; yet this rather rather militates againſt, than any way makes for his Opinion, ſince if the Two or Three Knights, who he ſays preſently after, were choſen by the Community of the County, did repreſent them, and according to the Form of the Writ conſulted and conſented to a Fifteenth for thoſe who are here called the Omnes Alii de Regno, and were Military Tenants in Capite of the Ordinary Rank, but of the ſame Order with the Knights; I ſay if ſo, I would then aſk the Doctor's Friends, who they were that made up that whole Community of the Kingdom in Parliament, and who (as appears by the Writ of the Thirtieth of this King) gave the above-mentioned Forty Shillings out of every Knight's-Fee? If they ſay, (as he doth in his * Gloſſary, citing this Record) that it is from thence very clear, that ſuch as paid this Scutage of Forty Shillings for a Knight's-Fee, were the tota Regni Communitas and no Others; and of theſe the Tenants in Capite granted, and paid it firſt for themſelves and their Tenants; and that then by this Community the Tenants in Capite only are to be underſtood, who were ſuppoſed to be preſent in this Parliament; then pray, to what purpoſe ſhould any other Military Tenants in Capite be afterwards ſummon'd to this Parliament, to grant this Fifteenth upon Moveables, when the whole Body or Community of them was already, by the Doctor's own Allowance, preſent in Parliament; and might then (according to his Conceit) as well have granted this Fifteenth, as they did the Forty Shillings Scutage upon every Knight's-Fee? But if it be ſaid, that theſe Knights were not Tenants in Capite, but other Inferior Military Tenants, who had received the Order of Knighthood, it will not at all mend the matter; becauſe if the Tenants in Capite were preſent and repreſented them, it had been very needleſs to ſummon thoſe to Parliament to grant a Tax for their Lords, as well as for themſelves; ſince the Earls, Barons, and leſs Tenants in Capite, were always wont to grant it for them. Nor is this the only Abſurdity that attends the Doctor's Interpretation of this Record; for if the Omnes Alii de Regno here mention'd, were only the Tenants in Capite, of the Ordinary Rank, as he will here have them, how could they give a Fifteenth of all the Moveable Goods in the Kingdom; Or how could they grant for thoſe whom they could no ways repreſent, viz. the King's Tenants in Petyt-Serjeanty, as alſo all Tenants by Socage-Tenure? whom the Doctor will have to be but very few? but I think I have ſhewn, that they muſt have been at this time a great Body; and beſides this, all Cities and Boroughs muſt have granted this Fifteenth as well as the reſt of the Kingdom, for that the King could not tax them at his Pleaſure, I hope to prove hereafter, notwithſtanding what the Doctor aſſerts to the contrary.

But as for the Commiſſion of the Ninteeenth of this King, for the appointing Taxors and Collectors to gather in this Fifteenth, which is directed to the Knights, Freemen, and the whole Communities of Counties; I think this too will rather make againſt than for him; for as for the Liberi Homines, or Freemen, tho' the Doctor in his Gloſſary will have them to ſignify Tenants in Capite, or at leaſt thoſe that held by Military Service, yet I hope I have already ſufficiently proved, that theſe Words muſt have another ſignification in this place, as well as the whole Community of Counties which immediately diately follows; or elſe none but Tenants in Capite, and thoſe by Knight's-Service, could have either paid or granted this Fifteenth, which will fall very ſhort of All Others of the Kingdom, who are there ſaid to have granted it. And beſides this, I cannot but obſerve what follows in this Writ, viz. 'Whereas the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and All Others of our Kingdom, now, as at other times, to Us and our Progenitors, have 'freely granted a Fifteenth part of all their Moveable Goods, &c. From whence I thus infer from the Doctor's own Conceſſion, that if the Knights of Shires then granted this Tax for all Others of the Kingdom, as they had formerly done at other times to the King and his Progenitors, it will then follow, that the Omnes Alii de Regno, as repreſented by Knights of Shires, gave Taxes of this kind to King John, Grand-father to Edward the Firſt, and may by a reaſonable Conſtruction be extended yet higher as far as the Reign of Henry the Second, or elſe the Averment in this Writ would not be true, that All the Orders of Men above-mentioned, and Oll Others of the Kingdom, now as at other times, had granted ſuch Aids to the King and his Progenitors. Dr. B's Treatiſe, ut Sup. Pag. 27.

But the Doctor is ſo confident, that the Cities and Boroughs had not Repreſentatives in this Parliament, when the Fifteenth abovemention'd was granted, that he will have it then levyed upon all the Cities and Boroughs in England without their Conſents: his * Words are theſe. * Ib. p. 27.

The Cities and Burghs, or at leaſt the City of London, this year had alſo a Fifteenth taxed and levyed upon them, which notwithſtanding it was demanded by the King, without their being ſummon'd to Parliament, by Citizens and Burgeſſes their Repreſentatives, yet their Complyance with the King's Demands was called a Grant.

This he endeavours to prove from the ſame Account-Roll ~~of~~ the ſame Great Roll above-cited, where certain Perſons (needleſs here 'to be named) appointed Aſſeſſors and Collectors of the above-men'tion'd Fifteenth, granted to the King in the City of London, and 'within the whole Precinct of the ſame City, in the Eighteenth 'Year of his Reign, were order'd to give Account of 2860 l. 13 s. '8 d. of the ſame Fifteenth, as it is contain'd in the Roll of Particulars delivered into the Treaſury, &c. Ib

And on theſe Words, granted to the King in the City of London, the Doctor hath made this Marginal Note, (with a reference to the word granted, viz. Upon the King's Demand, and ſending to them, which how the Doctor could make out from this Record, I know not; for any one that reads it would think, that they had granted this in Parliament, or in a Council or Colloquy at leaſt.

The † Doctor's next Inſtance to prove that the Citizens and Burgeſſes were not ſummon'd to Parliament, till the Twenty third of this King, is a certain Writ of Summons directed to the She'riff of Northumberland in the Twenty ſecond of Edward the Firſt, 'for a Parliament to meet at Weſtminſter on the morrow after 'St. Martin, and therefore commands the Sheriff to cauſe to be 'choſen out of the County aforeſaid, two diſcreet Knights moſt fit 'for Buſineſs, with full Power for themſelves and the whole Community † Ib. p. 28, 29. *Rot. ‘ munity of the County aforeſaid, to conſult and conſent to thoſe things, which the Earls, Barons, and Noblemen aforeſaid, ſhall have unanimouſly ordained in the premiſes, &c. Witneſs the King at Weſtminſter the eighth day of October.

* Id. 29.

* The like Letters or Writs, the Doctor ſays, were directed to every Sheriff in England; witneſſed as above.

Then on the day following, (that is) on the Ninth of October, the King directed other Writs (reciting in them much of this above) ‘ to every Sheriff to cauſe to be elected, two Knights more, to be added to the former, to come to Him at the ſame time and place, to hear and do, what he ſhould there more fully enjoyn them. Here were no Citizens or Burgeſſes ſummon'd by theſe Writs, and none but Knights, in number four, who with the Earls, Barons, and Great Men, on the very day of their Meeting, gave the King a Tenth of all their Goods, and the Writs or Commiſſions, whereby Taxors and Collectors of the ſame Tenth were aſſigned in every County, bear date the ſame day, as is moſt evident from the Records following.

And then the Doctor cites an old Account-Roll in the Exchequer, which hath this Title, as I ſhall render it to you in Engliſh:

The Tenth of Temporal Goods, granted to the King in England, on the morrow of St. Martin, * in the Twenty ſecond Year of King Edward the Firſt, ending, and the Twenty third, beginning.

Then follows in the ſame place, this Title, The Taxors and Collectors of the ſame Tenth are aſſigned in every County in this Form; thus tranſlated:

‘ † The King to the Knights, Freeholders, and the whole Community of the County of Cumberland, Greeting; whereas the Earls, Barons, Knights and All Others of our Kingdom, have liberally granted to us now toward the War, as heretofore to our Progenitors Kings of England, a Tenth of all their Moveable Goods, * except thoſe things, which were excepted in the laſt Fifteenth, which was formerly granted unto Us, &c.

* Note, K. Edward began his Reign Novem. 16. 1272. So that this was done A. D. 1294. Treatiſe, p. 30.

† Ib. Pat. 22 Ed. I. M. 2. in Cedula.

* i. e. Their Armour, Plate of ordinary Uſe, Jewels, and wearing Apparel.

Then follow the Names of the Taxors and Collectors to gather the ſaid Tenth, which are needleſs here to be recited.

After which the Doctor proceeds to ſhew from Matt. Weſtminſter, that the King call'd another Parliament this Year, to adviſe how to regain what He had loſt in Gaſcoigny; and towards this War the Clergy granted a Moiety of their Benefices and Goods for that Year, as appears by the King's Writ or Commiſſion to the Abbot of Feverſham to collect the ſame for the Province of Canterbury, which the Doctor hath there cited at large, bearing date at Weſtminſter the thirtieth of September in the Twenty ſecond Year of his Reign.

But the Doctor is certainly miſtaken in making this Convocation of the Clergy, which gave the King a Moiety of their Goods and Revenue, to be held at the ſame time with the Parliament, which granted him the Fifteenth above-mention'd; ſince this Writ for collecting the Tenths of the Clergy bears Date the 30*th* of September in his Twenty ſecond Year, whereas the Parliament which granted the King the Fifteenth did not meet until the 12*th* of November the Year following; but however for all that, the Doctor confounds them together, as appears by this following Inference which he makes from this Writ, as well as the former.

* Here we have a Moiety given this year of their Benefices and Goods by the Clergy, and a Tenth by the Earls, Barons, and Knights, for all others of the Kingdom, that is, all Free-Tenants, ſuch as held in Military Service, and others in Socage, which then were very few. Let us now ſee (ſays he) how and what the Cities, Burghes, and King's Tenants of his Demeſnes gave, or paid by themſelves, not being then reckoned, inter Omnes Alios de Regno, who granted a Tenth part only.

Theſe (ſays he) then were neither ſummon'd, nor came to a Common Council, or Parliament; but were required and induced by the King's Commiſſioners, or Taxors to pay a certain Sum charged upon, or demanded of them, which at this time was a Sixth part of all their Moveable Goods, towards the War. The City of London was firſt ſent to, and made an Example to all other Cities, Boroughs and Towns of the King's Demeſnes, and their Complyance with the King's Demands paſſed as, and under the name of a Grant.

This is indeed a very bold Aſſertion, and we ſhall ſee how the * Doctor will prove it; why truly he endeavours to do it by a Writ directed to the City of London in this form in Engliſh; 'The 'King to his Beloved and Faithful the Mayor, &c. and to the whole 'Community of the City of London Greeting: whereas in the form 'in which you lately granted Us a Fifteenth, you have alſo liberally and freely granted Us a Sixth part of your Goods and Moveables as an Aid for our War, we being willing to provide that the ſaid 'Sixth part ſhould be levied and collected to the leaſt Damage and 'Grievance of you, and each of you in the ſaid City, have appointed John de Banquelle, and five other Perſons there named to be the 'Collectors of the ſaid Tax. The Date of this Writ the Doctor hath not put down; but we muſt ſuppoſe it to have been ſome days before the following Commiſſion, and then the Doctor ſays thus.

Ibid. Eodem Anno. Num. ſive Rot. 73.

By the like Letters the ſeveral Perſons there under-named are appointed to collect the like Sixth part, in each of the Demeſne Cities, and other Towns belonging to the King in all the Counties there under-written, which are all, or moſt of the reſt of the Shires of England not needful to be here recited.

From all which the Doctor draws this general Concluſion; ‘ By ‘ all theſe Records, ſays he, 'tis moſt clear, there were no Citizens, ‘ Burgeſſes, or Tenants of the King's Demeſnes ſummon'd to great Coun- ‘ cils or Parliaments, until the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt, and alſo how ‘ they were Taxed before that time.

But whither this was true or not, we ſhall now proceed to examine; and firſt I cannot but take notice, that the very words of both theſe Writs above cited, the one to the City of London, and the other, for collecting this Sixth part in Cities and Towns of Antient Demeſne, do no ways countenance the Doctor's Aſſertion, that the Cities and Borough-Towns of England were not ſummon'd, or came to a Common-Council or Parliament, but were required and induced by the King's Commiſſioners, or Taxors to pay a certain Sum charged upon or demanded of them, and that their complyance with the Kings Demands paſſed as under the name of a Grant. For ~~But~~ how can theſe words in the Writ it ſelf bear that meaning? which are ſince you (the Citizens of London) have liberally and freely granted Us a Sixth part of your Goods, and in the following Commiſſion for collecting it in other Places, it is recited, that the Citizens and good Men of London, have freely granted a Sixth part, &c. which ſeems to import, not a meer Impoſition or Taxation at will, but a voluntary Conceſſion ſomewhere made, precedent to the Demand, and where could this Grant be more properly made, than in the precedent Parliament, though it be not expreſly mention'd in the Writ it ſelf? And I ſhall prove this by comparing the date and purport of this Writ, with that of the 22*d* of this King, whereby the Earls, Barons, Knights, and all Others of His Kingdom granted the King a Tenth of their Moveables, in both which the words are almoſt the ſame. In this Writ it is ſaid, that the Parties abovemention'd with all Others of the Kingdom, liberaliter fecerunt Decimam partem de Omnibus Bonis ſuis Mobilibus: And the words in the Writ now before us are, Sextam partem Bonorum & Mobilium Veſtrorum in Subſidium Guerræ noſtræ nobis Conceſſeritis liberalitèr & libentèr; which are both to the ſame ſenſe, only in one it is fecerunt, and in the other conceſſeritis. And though it is true, that the next Writ for the gathering this Sixth part upon the Towns of Antient Demeſne do plainly ſhew, that their Grant of it was done out of Parliament; yet it doth not from thence follow, that the City of London, and other Cities and Towns which were not the King's Antient Demeſnes, could be included within thoſe Writs, ſince the Commiſſioners are thereby impowered to demand the like Sixth part of the King's Demeſne, Cities and Towns in the Counties there mention'd, but of no Other: Nor doth the ſecond Writ call London one of the Demeſne Cities, for the words of the Writ are, ut aliis, qui ſunt de noſtris Villis Dominicis Exemplum præbeant ad Conſimile Subſidium faciendum, which is thus to be tranſlated, that they, viz. the Citizens of London may ſhew an Example to Others, who are of our Demeſne Towns; and not as the Doctor hath here render'd it, that they might ſhew an Example to Others of our Demeſne-Towns, to make the like Aid.

But ſuppoſe we ſhould admit London as well as other places to be now taxed, as a Town of Antient Demeſne, the Doctor would gain no advantage by it; for this Sixth part being to be levied only upon ſuch great Cities and Towns, as held in Antient Demeſne, could never concern the Major part of the Cities and Boroughs in England, which never held by that Tenure; ſo that they either wholy eſcaped without paying any thing to this Tax, or elſe they muſt have granted it by their Repreſentatives in Parliament.

And that thoſe Cities and Boroughs which were not Antient Demeſne, granted the Sixth part of their Moveables in the laſt Parliament, when all Others of the Kingdom granted a Tenth, is more than probable, by thoſe words in the Commiſſion, for the collecting this Tax of the Cities and Towns in Antient Demeſne, * which was to be done, Secundum Taxationem Decimæ jam Nobis in Regno noſtro conceſſæ, that is, in a due proportion to every Man's Eſtate, according to the Taxation of the Tenth already granted in our Kingdom. This muſt be the Tenth before granted in Parliament, for there was no other Tenth given or paid ſince that time; and therefore though the Writs of Summons are now loſt, yet Citizens and Burgeſſes might very well have been ſent to this Parliament, for preſently after it, viz. in this very year, the † Doctor himſelf in his Hiſtory of the Reign of this King, ſays, that the Citizens, Burgeſſes, and Tenants of the King's Demeſnes, paid a Sixth part of their Goods, but they not being granted in Parliament, there were Commiſſioners ſent to every City, Burgh and Town of his Demeſne, to require and induce them, to pay a certain Sum charged upon, or demanded of, them toward the War, which at this time was a Sixth part of their Goods, which was required firſt, and granted in London, as an Example to other Places. The Commiſſion for all Counties in England bears Date the 21*ſt* of November, twenty third of Edward the Firſt, and if the Doctor allows this Tax to have been granted this year by the Cities and Boroughs, in imitation of the Tenth, that was already granted by the reſt of the Kingdom; I may, I think, carry it further, and ſuppoſe that the Cities and Boroughs had their Repreſentatives in this Parliament, for otherwiſe thoſe that were not Antient Demeſnes, (which were far the Major part) muſt have paid nothing to this Tax. And though the Doctor here ſays, that all the Citizens and Burgeſſes in General paid the Sixth part of their Goods, yet that is more than the Authorities he vouches do warrant; ſeeing it is expreſly limited by the Commiſſion above-mention'd, that the Collectors ſhall gather in each of the Demeſne Cities and Towns belonging to the King, and None Other, as hath been already obſerved.

* Ibid. p. 31.

† Contin. of the Compleat Hiſt. / 3

I am ſenſible, there are two Objections, that may be made againſt this Suppoſition; the One, that in the Writs to the Sheriffs for the ſummoning four Knights of Shires to the laſt Council or Parliament, there are no Citizens and Burgeſſes, order'd to be ſummon'd by them.

The other is, that the Writ to the City of London, aſſigning certain Commiſſioners to collect the Sixth part of their Moveables, as alſo the Commiſſion granted for the raiſing the like Tax from the Cities and Towns in Antient Demeſne, do both of them bear Date in November, in the twenty third year of this King; whereas the Writs or Commiſſions iſſued for the appointing Collectors for the Tenth, that had been granted in the laſt Parliament is dated the 12*th* of November, in the twenty ſecond year of his Reign, which is above a year before; and then it is not likely, if this Sixth part had been given in Parliament, that the King would have omitted the collecting of it for above a Twelvemonth after; and therefore it is more probable that it was demanded of, and impos'd upon all the Cities and Boroughs of England, as well thoſe who held in Antient Demeſne, as thoſe that did not, by the King's ſole Prerogative, in the interval between the laſt Parliament, and the next of the twenty third of this King, that met but a few days after the Date of the Writ and Commiſſion above-mention'd, for levying that Tax upon the Cities and Towns of Antient Demeſne.

To the firſt of theſe Objections I anſwer thus, that in thoſe Writs of Summons to the Council or Parliament of the twenty ſecond of this King, the Citizens and Burgeſſes are not ſummon'd, yet there might be ſome Other Writs iſſued out at the ſame time to the Sheriffs, that they ſhould cauſe two Citizens, and two Burgeſſes to be choſen for every City and Borough of England, which Writs were not enter'd upon the Cloſe-Rolls of this year, or if they were, may be ſince embezil'd, or taken off on purpoſe to conceal the truth, or elſe they might be ſent down in looſe Writs, which are now loſt, and were never enter'd at all.

Nor can the Doctor's Friends have any reaſon to except againſt this Suppoſition, ſince theſe Writs of the eighteenth of this King, on which alone the Doctor lays the whole ſtreſs of his Authority, that the Knights of Shires were then firſt again ſummon'd, are enter'd in certain looſe Schedules, which if the Doctor had not diſcover'd, might have been utterly loſt and deſtroy'd, as were doubtleſs many other conſiderable Writs and Records, which had been long ago carried up into the White-Tower, and there rotted with the dampneſs of the Place, though ſome of them have been retrieved by the indefatigable Pains and Induſtry of Mr. Pryn, as Others have been ſince by the like care of Mr. Petyt, the preſent Keeper of thoſe Antient Monuments.

And as to the ſecond Objection concerning the Date of the Writ and Commiſſion, whereby it appears that the Sixth part aſſeſſed upon the Inhabitants of Cities and Towns in Antient Demeſne, was not collected, and therefore that it was not likely to be granted till the twenty third of this King, and that in an Interval of Parliament. This, I ſay, is no material Objection, ſince the King might for ſome Reaſons beſt known to Himſelf, only levy the Tenth which had been granted by the Knights of Shires for their reſpective Counties, and might defer the collecting of the Sixth part that had been given by the Citizens and Burgeſſes, till the following year, when He wanted a freſh ſupply of Money; and at the ſame time on the like occaſion, He thought fit to demand the like Aid of all Cities and Towns of Antient tient Demeſne; and though London was propos'd as an Example, yet was it not as a City of Antient Demeſne, but as being the Capital City of England, was to be a Pattern for all places of Antient Demeſne, to grant the like Tax of a Sixth part. And that the King might very well defer the levying of this Tax for a Twelvemonth, the Doctor's Friends can have no reaſon to deny, for that in his* Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, and alſo in his Gloſſary he hath cited a Writ of the 30*th* of this King, which relates to the Parliament held in the 18*th* year of his Reign, wherein a Scutage of Forty Shillings was granted by all the Orders or Eſtates therein mention'd, for an Aid to Marry his Eldeſt Daughter, which had nevertheleſs remain'd unlevied from the 18*th* to the 30*th* year of his Reign. And if this King could omit the levying ſo great a Sum, as this Tax of Forty Shillings upon every Knights-Fee through all England for twelve years, He might certainly forbear the Collecting and Levying this Sixth part of the Moveables of the Cities and Towns in Antient Demeſne, which was a much leſs Sum, and defer'd to a far ſhorter time. And therefore I ſhall now leave it to the Reader's Judgment to conſider, whether the Doctor from the Records he hath cited, hath made his Concluſion ſo clear and evident, as he ſuppoſes, that there were no Citizens nor Burgeſſes ſummon'd to Great Councils or Parliaments, until the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt, and alſo that they were Taxed before that time at the King's Will, and by his ſole Prerogative. But we muſt not yet leave *the Doctor, but return back to the 23*d* of this King, wherein he ſuppoſes the firſt Writs of Summons of the Cities and Burgeſſes to Parliament were iſſued; from whence he obſerves, that the Writ directs that thoſe Citizens and Burgeſſes ſhould have a Power to act ſeparately from the Knights of the Counties, and do what by Common Councils ſhould be ordained, in theſe words, Et dicti Cives, & Burgenſes Plenam & ſufficientem poteſtatem, pro ſe, & Communitate Civitatum & Burgorum Diviſim ab ipſis (i. e. Militibus) tunc ibidem habeant, ad faciendum tunc quod de Communi Concilio Ordinabitur in præmiſſis. And accordingly they made a different Grant, the Earls, Barons and Knights, who then ſat, treated, and conſulted altogether, about granting Taxes, gave an Eleventh part of all their Moveable Goods, and the good Men of his Demeſne Cities and Burghs granted a Seventh part of all their Moveable Goods.

P. 149.

* Treatiſe. Ib. p. 32, 33.

† And according to the Addition made in the Writ of Summons, when the Citizens and Burgeſſes are ſuppoſed firſt to have come to Parliament, there was alſo an Alteration made anſwerable to it in the Writ, or Commiſſion, for appointing Taxors and Collectors for the Levying and Collecting of his Eleventh, and Seventh part in the ſeveral Counties, which is not to be found in theſe Writs or Commiſſions before this time, The words of the Writ or Commiſſion are thus tranſlated into Engliſh.

Then follows a † Writ of the 23*d* of this King, directed to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and begins with this remarkable Clauſe, by the Doctor thus tranſlated into Engliſh.

' As the moſt juſt Law eſtabliſhed by Princes doth appoint, that which ' concerns All, ſhould be approved by All: So it evidently ſhews, ' that Dangers common to All, ſhould be obviated by Remedies provided ' by All. And then it proceeds to ſet forth the King of France's fraudu' lent ſurprize of Gaſcony, and the late Invaſion of the Kingdom with an ' intent to deſtroy the Engliſh Nation and Language, &c. and then con' cludes with that notable Clauſe, which hath been continued in all ' Writs of Summons for the Clergy to this day, firmly commanding and ' enjoyning him the Archbiſhop in the Faith and Love by which he ſtood ' obliged to the King, to be himſelf at Weſtminſter on the Sunday ' next after the Feaſt of St. Martin next coming, and that he ſhould ' warn the Prior and Chapter of his Church, the Archdeacon, and ' whole Clergy of his Dioceſs, and cauſe the Prior and Archdeacon in ' their own Perſons, and the Chapter by One, and the Clergy by Two ' fit Procurators or Proxies, having ſufficient Power from the ſaid ' Chapter and Clergy to be preſent with him, then and there to Treat, ' Ordain and Appoint with Him and the reſt of the Prelates, Great ' Men, and other Inhabitants of the Kingdom, how to prevent theſe ' dangers and deſign'd Miſchiefs. This bears Date at Wengeham the ' 30*th* of September, being above a Month before the Writs for Sum' moning the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes were iſſued.

|| Ib. p. 34. 35.

This (|| ſays he) is the firſt Summons I find directed to the Archbiſhop, by which he was order'd to cauſe the Body of the Clergy of his Dioceſs and the Chapter, to come to Parliament with him, by their Procurators or Repreſentatives, and the ſame Reaſon given in this Writ, that brought them thither, brought alſo the Citizens and Burgeſſes, as may appear by the Writ before recited, directed to every Sheriff of England, for the firſt choice of them; and is dated the third day of October, next following after the Date of this to the Archbiſhop.

Having thus fairly recited word for word, whatever Authorities or Arguments the Doctor hath thought fit to produce on this point, I ſhall make now ſome ſhort Animadverſions upon them: In the firſt place, I cannot ſee that any ſuch great ſtreſs is to be laid upon that Clauſe in this Writ of the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt, on which the Doctor builds all his Inferences, viz. that the ſaid Citizens and Burgeſſes ſhould have full and ſufficient power for themſelves and the Community of Cities and Boroughs ſeparately, from them (i. e. the Knights of Shires) then to do, what ſhall be ordain'd by common Advice concerning the Premiſſes.

For though I grant by this Clauſe, they were impower'd to make a different Grant of Taxes from the Earls, Barons and Knights of Shires, who then ſat, treated and conſulted together; yet this doth not prove it to be a new thing, which was never practiſed before, ſince when ever they were ſummon'd, it was neceſſary they ſhould be impower'd by thoſe that ſent them. And though it is true, the Citizens and Burgeſſes at that time treated apart concerning the quantity of the Tax granted upon their Moveable Goods, becauſe it was more in proportion then the reſt of the Kingdom at that time paid, yet as this might not be the firſt time that they granted theſe ſorts of Aids, ſo neither was it the laſt; the ſame way of granting them being continued throughout all the reſt of this King's Reign, as appears by that noted Record already cited of the 34*th* of this King, when All the Eſtates of the Kingdom granted Him an Aid of their Moveable Goods, (the Particulars of which ſhall be mentioned hereafter) for Knighting the King's Son, and towards the War with Robert Bruce. And the like manner of granting Taxes in uſe all his Succeſſor's time, until about the beginning of King Edward the Third, when the Lords Spiritual and Temporal continued to ſit by themſelves, and the Knights of Shires joyning with the Citizens and Burgeſſes, made a diſtinct Houſe or Aſſembly, as they continue to this day

N. B.

So likewiſe the Doctor's Obſervations upon the Writ or Commiſſion for appointing Taxors and Collectors for the Aid that was given in this Parliament of the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt, have nothing in them, but what may be eaſily anſwer'd; for as to his Marginal Note, that the Clauſe concerning the Citizens, Burgeſſes, and Other Good Men that liberally granted a Seventh part of their Moveables; though it is true they were not mention'd in the ſame Commiſſion, for the levying of the like Tax upon Moveables granted by the Knights of Shires, yet all the difference between them, is, that there might be then two different Commiſſions granted for the aſſeſſing and collecting theſe Aids, the One of which was to certain Perſons to aſſeſs and collect it from the whole Body of the Counties, and the Other for the doing the like in the Cities and Boroughs; for the words Conceſſerunt, or Conceſſerint, are found in both of them alike, as any one may obſerve, that will take the pains to compare them together.

So that there ſeems to be no great Myſtery in this not mentioning the Citizens and Burgeſſes in former Commiſſions for the choice of Collectors for Counties, than that the King was pleaſed to do that by ſeveral Commiſſions, and by two different ſets of Commiſſioners, which He thought fit in this Writ of the four and twentieth year of his Reign, (perhaps for the ſaving of double charges and trouble) to do by One ſingle Commiſſion, and to make the ſame Commiſſioners ſerve for aſſeſſing and collecting the Eleventh and Seventh parts as well from the whole Body of the Counties, as from the Citizens, Burgeſſes and Tenants in Antient Demeſne; and yet for all that, the Cities and Boroughs might grant their ſhare of theſe Taxes in Parliament, before this time which the Doctor here aſſigns for their firſt appearing in Parliament, and that only in order to grant thoſe Aids abovemention'd.

For if the King could the year before this impoſe a Tax of a Sixth part upon the Goods of the City of London, and all Other Cities and Boroughs of England by his Royal Prerogative, I cannot ſee any reaſon why He might not as well have continued on the ſame way of Taxing them, without ever putting Himſelf to the trouble of calling a Parliament, or cauſing the Repreſentatives to travel from one end of the Kingdom to the other, to the great charge of the Cities and Boroughs that ſent them, who were obliged to defray their Expences during their going to, ſtaying at, and returning from all Parliaments, as is particularly ſet down in the Writs for levying thoſe Expences for Citizens and Burgeſſes, as well as thoſe for Knights of Shires; and both theſe Writs (ſeveral of which are ſtill preſerved in the Reign of this very King) have alſo this particular Clauſe inſerted, ſicut in Caſu conſimili fieri conſuevit, as I have already taken notice of in the Argument I have drawn from the Petition of the Town of St. Albans, which would never have been there inſerted, had Citizens and Burgeſſes never been ſummon'd to Parliament till the 23*d* year of this King. This cannot well be too often mentioned, being of ſo great Moment, and therefore I make bold to repeat it, to keep it freſh in my Reader's Memory.

Ib. p. 34, 35. * But ſince the Doctor undertakes to give us ſome tolerable account from that Clauſe in the Writ to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, for the ſummoning of the Inferior Clergy to this Parliament we are now diſcourſing of, that this was the firſt Writ of Summons, whereby it appears they were ever call'd to Parliament for the Reaſon given in this Writ, viz. that that which concerns All, ſhould be approved by All; and concludes, that what brought the Inferior Clergy, brought alſo the Citizens and Burgeſſes to this Parliament, after near thirty years Intermiſſion; I ſhall endeavour to ſhew, that this Reaſon tho' ſeemingly ſpecious, yet hath no great ſubſtance in it; for if that Clauſe in the Writ was ſufficient to move the King now to ſummon the Inferior Clergy, and the Citizens and Burgeſſes to the ſame Parliament, it might as well have prevail'd with Him to have done it, when He had the War with Wales upon his Hands, and being in great want of Money. He ſummon'd thoſe three particular Conventions of the Clergy and Commons of the South and North of England, for the granting Hin a Benevolence in that his extream Neceſſity. 'Tis true, we cannot poſitively prove by any Writs of Summons to Parliament, that the Inferior Clergy were ever ſummon'd thither before in this King's Reign, any more than the Citizens and Burgeſſes, yet it doth not follow therefore, that they were never ſummon'd to any Parliament of this King's before this of the three and twentieth, ſince they might have been ſummon'd to ſeveral Parliaments before, had thoſe Writs to the Biſhops and Lords, as well as to the Commons, been now to be found upon the Rolls or any-where elſe. And ſuppoſe the Doctor had not by chance lit upon thoſe Writs of the 18th and 22d of this King, whereby he would prove the Knights of Shires to be preſent in Parliament, three years before he vouchſafes the Citizens and Burgeſſes the like favour, no doubt but He would have urged this Clauſe in the Writ of the 23d of this King as a ſufficient Reaſon, that the Knights of Shires likewiſe were now firſt ſummon'd, as well as the Repreſentatives of Cities and Boroughs.

But beſides all this, the caſe is not parallel between the bringing of the Inferior Clergy into Parliament, and this King's doing the ſame by the Citizens and Burgeſſes; for there might be a very good reaſon why He ſhould by this Clauſe of præmunientes, cauſe the Archbiſhops of Canterbury and York to ſummon their Inferior Clergy to appear by their Proctors in Parliament, becauſe by this means He could deſire an Aid of them every time a Parliament met, which was in thoſe times once, and ſometimes twice in two or three years at fartheſt; whereas before their coming into Parliament, He had no opportunity of obtaining any ſuch Aid from them, but when they met the two Archbiſhops in their reſpective Provincial Synods, which were not in the King's Power to call, but in the two Archbiſhops to aſſemble, as they thought fit; and though they might do it ſometimes at his deſire, yet this command they would often diſobey, as indeed the Archbiſhop of Canterbury did at firſt in this very Summons now before us, as hath been plainly enough proved by thoſe learned Pens, that have lately handled this Subject. But beſides all this, when the Clergy were met in ſuch a Synod, and that the King did either by One of the Archbiſhops, or elſe by certain Commiſſioners deputed on purpoſe, deſire an Aid or Subſidy of them, either out of their Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, or Perſonal Eſtates, they might deny it when ever they pleas'd, or if they granted it, it was often done at the Inſtance and Perſuaſion of the Biſhops, rather than their own Inclinations. Whereas (if you will believe the Doctor) the Condition of the Citizens and Burgeſſes of England, was wholy different from that of the Clergy; theſe were always free from being Taxed without their own Conſents, whereas the other (as the Doctor repreſents them) were Men of Mean and Servile Condition, and who enjoy'd no Liberties or Priviledges, ſo much as of exerciſing their Trades and Profeſſions, but what they derived from the King's Charters; ſo that being wholy his Vaſſals, He could impoſe what Aids or Taxes He pleas'd upon their Perſonal Eſtates (for Lands they had little, but what belong'd to their ſeveral Houſes or Dwellings) ſo that the bringing of theſe Citizens and Burgeſſes into Parliament at this time ſeems no ways ſuitable to the Arbitrary temper of this Prince, who indeed loved Abſolute Power, as much as his Father or Grandfather: Only when he ſaw the Nobility and People would not ſuffer it, He had ſo much diſcretion as to part with it, as any one may obſerve, that pleaſes to conſult Matt. Weſtminſter and Walſingham in the Reign of this King; and what hath been written from them in this laſt Volume of my General Hiſtory.

But to return to the matter before us; what could the King propoſe to Himſelf by bringing them now into Parliament, I cannot imagine, unleſs it were to give them a liberty often times to refuſe, as well as to grant thoſe Taxes the King demanded of them; which you may ſee from this Hiſtory they often did in the Reigns of King Edward the Third, and Richard the Second, when being joyn'd with the Knights of Shires, they obtain'd ſo much Power, that no Bills, or Demands of Money from the King could be brought into the Houſe of Peers, till it had been firſt propoſed and conſented to by the Commons. And ſo much for the Great Improbability of the King's bringing in the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament at this time.

And as for the poſitive proofs which have been offered to the contrary, &c. that they were preſent in all former Parliaments in the laſt King's Reign, as well as this, I ſhall leave to the Reader's conſideration; and will now proceed to the Account the Doctor gives us, concerning what Cities and Boroughs at firſt ſent their Repreſentatives to Parliament: which he doth as follows.

* Ib. p. 35.

* Having thus proved the time when, and the Cauſe why, Citizens, Burgeſſes, and the Tenants of the Kings Demeſnes were at firſt ſummon'd to Parliament, we ſhall proceed to diſcover, what Cities and Boroughs ſent their Repreſentatives, or Citizens and Burgeſſes, upon ſuch Summons. The Anſwer to this is very ſhort, that they were only the Dominici Civitates, and Burgi Regis, the King's Demeaſne-Cities and Burghs, ſuch as had Charters from the King, and paid a Fee-Farm Rent in lieu of the Cuſtoms and other Advantages and Royalties that belonged to the Crown, and were originally taken and gather'd by the King's Collectors and Officers, whether Bailiffs, Port-Reves, Seneſchals or Stewards, or by what other Names they were called: But afterward collected and received by Officers choſen by the Cities and Burghs, according to Licence granted by the King's Charter, to the uſe of ſuch Cities and Burghs, or perhaps ſometimes by Permiſſion only.

† Ib. p. 35. App. N. 1. A.

This doth abundantly appear (ſays the † Doctor) by the Account given of Great Yarmouth in the Appendix, where after the Deſcription of that, and Gorleſton taken out of Domeſday Book, it is ſaid thus, (which I put into Engliſh) 'and it is to be underſtood, 'that the Progenitors of Our Lord the King held the aforeſaid 'Burgh (that is, Yarmouth) in their own Hands, receiving all the 'profits iſſuing from the ſaid Port, until the time of King John, 'who granted it in Fee-Farm to the Burgeſſes, paying to Him and 'his Heirs fifty five pounds by the year; for the payment whereof 'they had nothing but the Cuſtoms, and other Profits of the Port, 'neither might they at any time of the year take any Cuſtoms of 'things bought and ſold in the Mercate upon the Land.

Ib. Append. N. 1. B.

* Not long after King John had granted his Charter, there happened a Controverſie between Gorleſton and South-Yarmouth in Luthinglond, both on the other ſide of the River, and Great-Yarmouth, about certain Cuſtoms and Priviledges in the 12*th* of Henry the Third, and again in the 34*th* of Edward the Firſt, which was determined in the Exchequer by the Lord Treaſurer, the Chancellor of England, the Juſtices of both Benches, and others of the King's Counſel (in the manner already mentioned) by which Record it is evident, that Great-

Great-Yarmouth was holden of the King in Fee-Farm, was ſtiled Villa Regis, the King's Town, and Liber Burgus, a Free-Burgh, and enjoyed ſuch Liberties as belonged to a Free-Burgh; only by, and in reſpect of the Charter.

I have fairly tranſcribed the Doctor's Arguments and Authorities for his Opinion, and ſhall now examine the truth of them; and as to his general Aſſertion in the firſt Paragraph, that only the King's Demeſne-Cities and Burghs, ſuch as had Charters from Him, and paid a Fee-Farm Rent in lieu of the Cuſtoms and other Advantages and Royalties that belonged to the Crown, &c. that it were theſe, and only ſuch as at firſt were Burghs, and ſent Members to Parliament I abſolutely deny, ſince the greateſt part of the Antient Boroughs by Preſcription, were never of the King's Demeſne-Cities nor Boroughs; nor had any ſuch Charters from the King for the payment of a Fee-Farm Rent, in lieu of all Cuſtoms, &c. for moſt part of the Towns of England were Boroughs before ever they were Cities, or Towns-Corporate, and the greateſt part of the Borough-Towns immediately holding of Biſhops, Abbots, or Temporal Lords, never paid any ſuch Fee-Farm Rent in lieu of Cuſtoms, and other Advantages and Royalties from the Crown, the King having nothing at all to do in moſt of thoſe Boroughs. And as for what he hath cited from his own Appendix, relating to the Borough of Great-Yarmouth, it doth not at all concern the matter in diſpute, ſince the Grant of the Cuſtoms or Duties of the Port of Yarmouth, was made to them after they were a Borough, and when they were already a Town-Corporate, as appears by the very words of this Record concerning Yarmouth, cited by the Doctor, wherein that Town is called a Borough, and the Inhabitants Burgeſſes, before King John granted it to them in Fee-Farm at the Rent aforeſaid; and though in the Controverſie between Gorleſton and South-Yarmouth, and Great-Yarmouth, it was determined, that the latter was holden of the King in Fee Farm, and was Liber Burgus, a Free-Borough, and enjoy'd ſuch Liberties as belonged to a Free-Burgh, only by and in reſpect of their Charter; this (though it be true) doth not at all contradict what I aſſert, the queſtion between us being, whether Cities and Boroughs have any Right of ſending Members to Parliament, but as they are Free-Boroughs made ſo by Charter from the King, which the Doctor affirms, and I deny. And I ſhall leave it to the Reader to judge, whether it doth not appear by the Record it ſelf, that Yarmouth was a Borough, and had Burgeſſes before ever it was made a Free-Burgh, and conſequently as ſuch a Borough might ſend Members to Parliament.

But let us now ſee what the Doctor ſays in oppoſition to this, which is as follows.

* It was, and is the General Opinion of Lawyers, that ſuch Towns as ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament, (tho' but very ſeldom, and paid Tenths, when they were granted in Parliament) were Burghs, notwithſtanding they had not, nor perhaps now have, any Charter, Fair, Market, Franchiſe, or other Liberties, which ſhould conſtitute and make them Burghs: But this is a mighty miſtake; for there were antiently, and are yet, many Towns, that ſent their Repreſentatives to Parliament, which were not Burghs, but only Towns of Antient Demeſnes, and theſe (in the granting of Taxes eſpecially) conſulted, and gave their con- ſent with the Citizens and Burgeſſes, who in all Taxes upon Goods and Perſonal Eſtates, did uſually give and pay about one Third, or Fourth, more than the other Towns, which were neither Cities or Burghs, or Ancient Demeſnes, before the Tenths and Fifteenths were conſtantly and regularly ſetled.

Ibid. * Rot. Clauſ. 34 Ed. I. M. 15. Dorſ. in Cedula Append. N. 13. Append. N. 11, 12, 13.

This will be fully evinced by the following * Records; Edward the Firſt intending to Knight his Son, ſummon'd the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men to be before Him and his Council, on the Morrow after Holy Trinity, to treat of and grant an Aid, which was due upon that occaſion. He alſo ſent to all the Sheriffs of England to cauſe to come before Him and his Council on the ſame day, two Knights of every County, and of every City two Citizens, and of every Burgh one or two Burgeſſes, as the Burgh was greater, or leſs, to Treat, Ordain, and Conſent, &c.

I find the Doctor is reſolved to deny the Opinion of the Learned Lawyers that were Members of Parliament in the year 1628. and whether they or the Doctor are in the Right let the Reader judge; but they believed at the time when this matter came to be debated, (which is ſomething above threeſcore and ten years ſince) that all thoſe Towns that ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament and paid Tenths, when granted in Parliament were Boroughs although they had no Market, Franchiſe, or other Liberty, which ſhould conſtitute them ſo. Now what hath the Doctor to object againſt this? Why, that in the latter end of the Reign of Edward the Firſt, which is near four hundred years ago, there were, and yet are many Towns, that ſent their Repreſentatives to Parliament, which were not Burghs, but only Towns of Antient Demeſnes, and theſe (in the granting of Taxes eſpecially) conſulted and gave their conſent with the Citizens and Burgeſſes, &c. and this he proves from that Record which is printed at large in his Appendix, as alſo by Mr. Petyt at the end of his Rights of the Commons aſſerted, and which I have had occaſion to mention more than once in this preſent Diſcourſe; the Subſtance of which is, that all thoſe Orders of Men above mention'd, being aſſembled before the King's Council, and having receiv'd their Demands on behalf of the King, after their retiring and deliberating apart, at laſt they all unanimouſly agreed, to grant the King an Aid for making his Son a Knight, and for the War againſt Robert Bruce; and the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Other Great Men, and alſo the Knights of Shires, unanimouſly granted to the King for themſelves and whole Community of the Kingdom a Thirtieth part of all their Temporal Moveable Goods; the reſt not being to my preſent purpoſe I omit.

Ib. p. 37.

But the next † Paragraph (ſince it more relates to the matter in hand) I ſhall give you at length, together with what follows.

Alſo the Citizens and Burgeſſes of Cities and Burghs, and Others of the King's Demeſnes, aſſembling together, and treating about the Premiſes, conſidering the Burthens incumbent upon the King as was before mention'd, unanimouſly granted unto Him for the Cauſes abovesaid, a Twentieth part of their Moveable Goods. And then he proceeds thus, Who, and what the Cæteri, the Reſidue, or Others of the King's Demeſnes were, is plainly diſcover'd in another Record about the ſame matter.

It is to be remembred, that on the Morrow of Holy Trinity laſt paſt, the Prelates and other Great Men of the Kingdom, for themſelves and the whole Community of the Kingdom, granted to the Lord the King, for themſelves and the whole Community of the ſame Kingdom, a Thirteenth part of all their Temporal Goods, without Cities, Burghs, and the King's Demeſnes. And the Citizens, Burgeſſes, and Tenants of the aforeſaid Demeſnes, granted a Twentieth part of their Goods, as well toward the Knighthood of Edward the King's Son, as towards the Defence of Scotland, againſt Robert Bruce and his Complices, the King's Enemies, and the form of the aforeſaid Grant is more fully noted in the Memorials of Trinity-Term laſt paſt.

By this Record (continues the * Doctor) it is very plain, that the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Knights of Shires conſulted together, and treated about their Thirtieth part, which they granted for themſelves and whole Community of the Kingdom; as alſo that the Citizens, Burgeſſes, and Tenants of the King's Demeſnes, treated and conſulted by themſelves apart, and granted a Twentieth part of their Goods, which was a Third part more than the Lords and Knights gave; ſo that the Tenants of the King's Demeſnes, were now Members of Parliament.

* Ibid.

I deſire the Reader would obſerve from what hath been ſaid, whether the Doctor does prove from theſe Records, that which he hath ſo poſitively aſſerted, that none but the King's Demeſne, Cities, and Boroughs, were then ſummon'd to Parliament, and granted this Tax of a Twentieth part of their Moveable Goods; for tho' theſe two Records themſelves plainly diſtinguiſh the Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Cities and Burghs from the Tenants of the King's Demeſnes, as Perſons holding by two ſeveral ſorts of Tenures, yet the Doctor doth here confound them, and make them all one, and that by the word Cæteri, muſt be underſtood the Reſidue, or Others of the King's Demeſnes, as if it related to all the Cities and Boroughs being ſo alſo; whereas if theſe words were to be underſtood in that Senſe only, the words following, viz. and Tenants of Antient Demeſnes would be impertinent, if all of them had been ſo alike: But in this laſt Record it is put ſeparately, the Cities, Boroughs, and the King's Demeſnes, which are plainly enough diſtinguiſhed from the former, and the Doctor might with much better colour aſſert, that the Citizens and Burgeſſes were all one ſort of Men, than that they were all One with the Tenants of Antient Demeſne, only, becauſe theſe three laſt ſorts of People not being then part of the Community or Body of the County, were wont in thoſe times to ſit together, and to agree what Aid they would grant the King. But I need not go farther, than the very next Record which the Doctor hath cited in this very Page, which is, the King's Commiſſion, and Aſſignment of Commiſſioners to levy, and collect the Twentieth, and Fifteenth granted in the firſt of Edward the Second, which proves the ſame thing, though not in the Senſe, the Doctor would put upon it, and I ſhall here give you his Tranſlation of this Record.

* The

* Rot. Pat. 1. Ed. II. p. 1. M. 7.

* The King to the Knights, Freemen, and whole Community of the County of Middleſex, as well within Liberties as without, Greeting. 'Whereas the Earls, Barons, Knights and Freemen, and the Communities of Counties of our Kingdom, have courteouſly and gratefully granted to Us a Twentieth part of their Moveable Goods, and the Citizens, Burgeſſes, and Communities of Cities and Burghs of the ſame Kingdom, and alſo the Tenants of the Antient Demeſne of our Crown, a Fifteenth part of their Moveable Goods, &c. Now I will leave it to the Impartial Reader to determine, whether any thing can more expreſs the different Orders and Degrees of Men, than theſe words, the Communities of Counties, and alſo thoſe that follow in Latin, nec non Tenentes de Antiquis Dominicis Coronæ Noſtræ.

† Ib. p. 38.

And indeed the † Doctor himſelf in the leaf following grants, that theſe Tenants in Antient Demeſnes did not continue long to grant thus ſeparately; for about the middle of the Reign of this preſent King Edward the Second, or in the beginning of his Succeſſors, he ſays, that the Tenants in Antient Demeſnes are no longer mention'd in the Commiſſions of the Taxors and Collectors, as Grantors of thoſe Taxes: So that all the Doctor hath here proved, is, what no body denies, that hath peruſed theſe Records, that the Tenants of the King's Towns and Mannors in Antient Demeſne, then granted their ſhare of all Taxes that were laid upon Moveable Goods, and that in Parliament, after the ſame rate and manner as the Cities and Boroughs, until ſuch time as thoſe Tenants came to give all other Taxes with the Body of the County, and then all Diſtinction between them and the reſt of the Inhabitants of the Shires being taken away, they came to have Votes in the Choice of the Knights of Shires, and to pay their ſhare towards their Expences , as they do at this day.

All that remains doubtful in the above cited Record of the 34th of Edward the Firſt, is, in what manner theſe Tenants in Antient Demeſne were ſummon'd by the Sheriffs, ſince there is no particular Clauſe to be found in the Writs, for their being ſummon'd to this or any other Parliament; none but Citizens and Burgeſſes being therein mention'd. And in this very Record it ſelf, it is expreſs'd, that two Knights of every County, and of every City two Citizens, and of every Burgh two Burgeſſes, choſen by the Communities of the ſaid Cities and Boroughs, came before the King's Council to Ordain and Conſent in like manner, &c. which is the only clauſe, that can any ways inſinuate, that theſe Tenants in Antient Demeſne were the Citizens and Burgeſſes above mention'd; but theſe words cannot be taken in that Senſe, and it is indeed more than what the Doctor himſelf aſſerts, who ſays in the leaf aforegoing, that there were antiently many Towns that ſent their Repreſentatives to Parliament, which were not Burghs, but only Towns of Antient Demeſnes, and the Record it ſelf only mentions Cities, and Boroughs, and not ſuch ſmall Towns as could be neither the one nor the other.

Not that I am of the Doctors mind neither, that every of theſe Towns in Antient Demeſne ſent One or two Burgeſſes to Parliament, for that had been to have given them as Great a Priviledge as the Cities and Boroughs themſelves; and therefore I rather incline to believe, that all the Major part of the Inhabitants of theſe Towns in Antient Demeſne, met together, and elected certain Perſons of their own Order or Body to repreſent them, as long as they continued to give Taxes ſeparately from the Body of the County; but of theſe things which are ſo obſcured by length of time, I ſhall not be poſitive; only thus much appears from a Record of the Eighth of Edward the Third, which is alſo cited by the Doctor as follows.

'Upon Complaint of the Barons, Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes 'to the King in Parliament, that the Taxors and Collectors for Bribes 'ſpared ſome Men, and by Colour of their Office extorted from O'thers more than they ought to pay, and apply'd it to their own 'uſe; with requeſt to Him, that they might pay toward the Fif'teenth and Tenth then granted, as they had done to the laſt Tenth 'and Fifteenth, there were ſent Commiſſioners into every County in 'England, to agree and compound with the Inhabitants of every Town 'that was to pay a Fifteenth; and alſo with the Communities of Cities 'and Burghs, and Men of the Towns of Antient Demeſnes, which paid 'a Tenth, ad tractandum & concordandum cum Communitatibus Civitatum & Burgorum, ac Hominibus Villarum, & Dominicorum antiquorum, qui hujuſmodi Decimam & Quintam-Decimam ſolvere tenentur, for the Sums they were to pay; which Sum was fixed upon the particular Towns, Cities and Burghs for the future, and collected and rated moſt commonly, by the Inhabitants (I ſuppoſe) amongſt themſelves; the chief Collectors and Taxors in every County were reſerved to be Taxed by the Treaſurer and Barons of the Exchequer as before.

Id. p. 39.

From whence we may make ſeveral uſeful Obſervations; 1. That though only the Barons, Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes made this Complaint in Parliament concerning the Corruption of theſe Taxors and Collectors, and that thereupon Commiſſioners were ſent into every County of England, as above ſaid; yet you may take notice that they were to treat with the Community or Commons of Cities and Boroughs, and with the Men of Towns and other Places of Antient Demeſnes by themſelves, as Perſons wholy Diſtinct from the former; but whether theſe Tenants in Antient Demeſne had any Repreſentatives in the laſt Parliament above-mention'd, is not here expreſſed; however it is moſt likely they had, though after this time the Doctor ſays, and perhaps truly enough, that he cannot find them any more mention'd for the reaſon he hath already given; and we may alſo from this Record obſerve, the occaſion and manner of firſt ſettling Fifteenths and Tenths, which way of Taxing was long in uſe in this Kingdom. But ſince the Doctor in his next Paragraph hath given us a greater Light into this matter, I will here ſet down his own words.

* I could never find the Roll, or any Book of this Eſtabliſhment of this Eighth year of King Edward the Third, but in a † Book of Fifteenths and Tenths in the Third year of King Henry the Fifth, where the Particular Sums of every ordinary Town, and of every City, Burgh, and || Town of Antient Demeſnes in all Counties of England are noted, there is often Reference to the particulars of ſuch a Roll in that Eighth year. After which time, when Tenths and ther City, nor Burgh, was Antient Demeſne.

* Ibid.

Fifteenths were reduced to a certainty, the Parliament for the moſt part granted Taxes of thoſe Denominations, as half a Tenth and Fifteenth, a whole Tenth and Fifteenth, two Tenths, and two Fifteenths, &c. according to the Exigency of the Kings Affairs.

I think there cannot be a plainer Diſtinction made between the Cities and Boroughs, and Towns of Antient Demeſne, than the Doctor hath here given us in this Paragraph, and in the Marginal Note upon it, which I do not at all gain-ſay, ſince it plainly confutes what he at firſt aſſerted, viz. that all Cities and Boroughs of England before the 23d of Edward the Third, were Taxed, as the King's Antient Demeſnes; and yet notwithſtanding this plain Difference, he would (if he could) again confound the Demeſne-Cities and Boroughs, with thoſe that were never ſo at all; and therefore I ſhall here tranſcribe what he ſays farther concerning them as follows.

* Ib. p. 39.

* There hath been often mention made of the Kings Demeſne-Cities and Burghs, as well as of his Tenants of Antient Demeſne, in this Treatiſe. And it will much tend to the underſtanding of it, and of Antient Records and Hiſtory where they are mention'd, to know what they were. And if they be duly conſider'd, they are not much unlike one another, having their Names from the ſame thing, that is, from holding of the King by Fee-farm. For the Towns and Lands which are found in Domeſday-Books under the Title of Terra Regis, were then and afterwards kept in his Hands, and managed by Præpoſiti or Bayliffs, (as were moſt of the Towns and Lands of Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and Other Great Men) and called his, and their Demeſnes; which in proceſs of time were let to farm to Tenants for a conſiderable part of their true value, an half part, third or fourth at leaſt; and this Rent was called a Fee-farm-Rent; the Tenants eſteeming what theſe Eſtates were worth above the Rent, or in reſpect of the Tenure to be to them, ut, or tanquam de feodo, as if they were holden in Fee, paying their Rent and Tallages.

† Ib. p. 40.

† Of the ſame Condition were Cities and Burghs, (as the Doctor would have it) at firſt kept in the King's Hands, and the Cuſtoms and Profits that aroſe from Trade, gathered by his Bayliffs and Officers, which aſterward were let out in Fee-farm to the Communities of Cities and Burghs, which commonly were made ſuch by the ſame Charters, by which the Cuſtoms in kind, or the true Value of them, as then collected, were changed into Fee-farm-Rents, and the King's Officers or Others in lieu of them, were made Officers as well to the Cities and Burghs, as to Himſelf. This is clearly apparent from the Narrative of Great-Yarmouth in the Appendix, N. 1. A. N. 1. B. and from the Charter N. 2. as alſo from the Second Charter of Donewic, N. 3. B. as well as from Others, and may further be confirmed by the following Record, of which I ſhall only give you the Doctor's Engliſh Tranſlation.

Adventus Vicecom. An. 5. Ed. III. finiente, incipiente 6. in Craſtino S. Mich. apud Remem. Theſaurar. in Scaccario.

The Americiaments of the Men and Burgeſſes, Farmers of divers Towns, holden of the King in Fee-farm, who came not to the Exchequer to make their Proffer (i. e. the beginning of their Accounts) on the morrow of St. Michael, in the year of the Reign of King Edward the Third, after the Conqueſt, the Sixth beginning, the Fifth ending.

Dorſet.	Of the Men of the Town of Bridport, for the ſame,	Five Marks.

I have given you the Doctor's Quotation at large, that you may the better obſerve the difference between thoſe Towns and Mannors that were the King's Antient Demeſnes, and thoſe Cities and Boroughs that were not ſo: And I deſire no better Teſtimony to confute what he hath laid down, than the very Record he hath here cited. For though it be granted that the Kings Antient Demeſnes were often let out to Tenants at Fee-farm Rents, and upon payment of certain reaſonable Talliages when the King pleas'd to impoſe them; yet it doth no where appear, that all the Cities and Burghs of England either then were, or ever had been the King's Antient Demeſnes; and it happens too very unluckily for the Doctor's Opinion, that the Town of Bamburgh in Northumberland, never was a Borough that ſent Members to Parliament, and it is now wholy ruin'd, and nothing left of it but the old Walls; and therefore the Fee-farm-Rent which the Men of that Town then pay'd the King, was for the Lands or Houſes they held of Him, and could not be for any Liberty or Priviledge relating to Trade. Nor did the letting out the Cuſtoms and Profits that aroſe from Trade at a Fee-farm-Rent to the Communities of ſuch Cities and Boroughs by Charters, thereby conſtitute them either Cities or Boroughs; for as to the Cities, it is plain by the Priviledges granted by the ſeveral Charters the Doctor hath cited in his Appendix, from p. 25 to the end, that they are in every one of them call'd Cities, and the Grants are made to them as ſuch in the very beginning of their Charters; viz. the Cities of London, Wincheſter, Lincoln, York and Norwich, (which are all the Inſtances he hath given us) and the King therein calls the Inhabitants of them Citizens: and that they were Communities or Corporations before, ſtill further appears, that in moſt of them there is mention made of their Gilda Mercatoria, (by which the Doctor himſelf underſtands their Liberty to trade as a Society or Corporation) as a thing then in being, to which only ſome New Priviledges are added. And though the Charter of * King John to the City of York begins with theſe words, Sciatis Nos conceſſiſſe Civibus Noſtris de Eboraco, Omnes Libertates & Leges, & Conſuetudines ſuas, & nominatim Gildam ſuam Mercatoriam & Hanſas ſuas in Anglia & Normania, & Leſtagia ſua per totam Coſtam maris, quieta, ſicut ea unquam melius & liberius habuerunt tempore Regis Henrici Avi patris Noſtri: Yet the word conceſſiſſe here ſignifies no more than a

* Cart. 1 Johan. p. 1. N. 75. Ap. N. 21.

Confirmation of their Liberties and Cuſtoms, and particularly their Gilda Mercatoria, ſince they were to enjoy it and all the reſt, as well or better, than they had done in the time of his Grandfather King Henry; which had been to no manner of purpoſe, if thoſe Liberties had never been enjoy'd before this Charter. And the like I may ſay to the Boroughs he mentions, viz. Yarmouth and Dunwich, both which in their Reſpective Charters (cited by the Doctor) whereby they were made Free-Boroughs, are call'd the Boroughs of Yarmouth and Dunwich, and the Inhabitants of them Burgeſſes; and I ſuppoſe as ſuch, they might have ſent Members to Parliament before the Grant of the Liberties contain'd in thoſe Charters, which indeed made them Free-Boroughs or Corporations, as an addition to their former Priviledges. And though in that to Yarmouth, there is no mention of their Gilda Mercatoria, yet it is certain they had One granted either by King John or Henry the Third, albeit, their Charters are not recited in the Doctor's Appendix: but however thus much is mention'd, that they had all the Liberties granted them of a Free-Borough, of which certainly this of enjoying a Gilda Mercatoria, or Trading Gild muſt be One. Nor could they have had the Cuſtoms of the Port of Yarmouth granted to them at the Fee-farm-Rent there mention'd, had there not been a Corporate Body thereby erected, which was both to receive the Duties upon all Goods imported, and was alſo anſwerable for the Rent the King was to receive in lieu of them.

But that the Town of Dunwich had their Mercatory-Gild, and was a Corporation before King John's Charter (though it be thereby alſo expreſly granted) appears by theſe words, Conceſſimus etiam eis Hanſam & Gildam-Mercatoriam, ſicut habere conſueverint, that is, We have granted them alſo their Trading-Society and Mercatory-Gild * or Company, in the ſame manner as they were wont to enjoy them; and that this Priviledge of a Trading-Company or Society, was not confined to Sea-Ports alone, appears alſo by the Charter of King Henry the Third to Wallingford, which immediately follows in the ſame Appendix, whereby He Grants to his Burgeſſes of Wallingford for ever, all their Liberties, Laws and Cuſtoms, as well and as honourably as they held them in the time of King Edward the Confeſſor, and of his Great Grandfather King William, and of William his Son, and of his Grandfather King Henry, (to wit) the Gilda-Mercatoria, with all other their Laws and Cuſtoms: which is rather a Confirmation of their Former Priviledges, than a Grant of New ones.

Now from all theſe Charters, it is plainly evident, that the Doctor did not conſider the Senſe of them, when he made uſe of them; or elſe he would not have ſo poſitively aſſerted, as he hath done, 'That in the Reign of King Edward the Confeſſor, as likewiſe afterward in the Reign of William the Conqueror, we find the Burgeſſes or Tradeſmen in great Towns had in thoſe times their Patrons, under whoſe protection they traded, and paid an Acknowledgment thereof; or elſe were in a more ſervile Condition, as being in Dominio Regis, vel Aliorum, altogether under the Power of the King, or other Lords. And it ſeems to me, that then they traded not, as being in any Merchant-Gild, Society and Community,

So the Doctor interprets thoſe words in his Notes upon this Charter.

‘nity, but meerly under the Liberty and Protection given them by their Lords and Patrons, who probably might have power from the King to licence ſuch a number in this or that Port or Trading-Town: Whereas it is evident, that long before his pretended Conqueſt, the Great Cities and ſeveral conſiderable Borough-Towns of England were Politick Bodies or Corporations.

So that it appears from what the Doctor himſelf hath cited, that far the greateſt part of the Cities and Boroughs of England were never the King's Antient Demeſnes, nor were created Cities or Free-Boroughs by his Charters ſince the Conqueſt.

And this the * Doctor himſelf in part acknowledges in the next Paragraph, as follows, ‘Having ſeen what the Civitates & Burgi Domini Regis, the King's Demeſne Cities and Burghs were, we ſhall next ſhew what, and how many of the preſent Parliament-Burghs were Antient Demeſnes. And in doing this, I will follow the Direction of an Antient Writ, to the Treaſurer and Barons of the Exchequer in the 48*th* of Edward the Third, when the Men of the Town of Lindon in the County of Roteland, complained to the King, that notwithſtanding it was neither a Burgh, nor Antient Demeſne of the Crown, yet it was taxed a Tenth, whereas they ſhould have been taxed only a Fifteenth. In this Caſe the King Commands the Treaſurer and Barons of the Exchequer, that if it did appear by his Book called Domes-day, or by other Rolls and Memorials of the Exchequer, or any other competent way, that it was neither Burgh nor Antient Demeſne, they ſhould accept a Fifteenth, and diſcharge them of the Tenths, &c.

I do not deſire more for my purpoſe, than what the Doctor here hath granted; for whereas he hath poſitively aſſerted, that King Henry the Third, and Edward the Firſt, had before the 23*d* year of his Reign aſſeſſed London, and all the Cities and Boroughs of England at a Sixth or Seventh part of all their Moveable Goods, as they were His Cities and Towns in Antient Demeſne, here he falls ſhort of that General Aſſertion; for no body can deny, that many of the preſent Parliament-Burghs were Antient Demeſnes; yet beſides that, they were alſo ſuch Antient Boroughs, as were accuſtomed to ſend Members to Parliament: And if they had enjoy'd that Priviledge only as they were Towns in Antient Demeſne, how come they to continue to ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament at this day, when all the ſmaller Towns that held in Antient Demeſne, have long ſince left off ſending any Members thither, and have been for time beyond Memory taxed with the Body of the County, as the Doctor himſelf acknowledges? but I am ſenſible that he has ſtill a Refuge to fly to, which he does a few pages further, when he ſays, that all Other Cities and Boroughs that were not Antient Demeſne, ſent Members to Parliament, only as they had been made Cities and Free-Boroughs by the Charter of the Kings ſince the Conqueſt, or elſe of ſome other Lords; which Opinion I ſhall conſider further by and by. In the mean while it is ſufficient for our preſent purpoſe, that it appears by this Record, concerning the Town of Lindon, that it was to be tryed by Domes-day-Book, and other Records of the Exchequer, whether that Place was a Borough, or elſe one of the King's Antient Demeſnes; which manifeſtly ſhews they were two different things.

* Ib. p. 41. And in the next Paragraph, the * Doctor hath given us from Domeſday-Book an Account, which of the preſent Boroughs were Antient Demeſne at the time of that Survey, and which were not; for which I refer the Reader to the Book it ſelf: only it does not make for the Doctor's Opinion, that the three Other Towns which he would have to be amerced five Marks a piece, for not making the Proffers in the Exchequer, viz. Bedford, Colcheſter and Bridport, are all omitted among the Boroughs that were then of Antient Demeſne, and yet every one of theſe ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament at this day.

† P. 42. In the following † Page, the Doctor proceeds to give us an Account of the Original of ſuch Boroughs as are not to be found in Domes-day-Book, and ſhews, that at the time of that Survey, none of the now Boroughs of Cornwall, Devonſhire and Wiltſhire are entred as ſuch, being only deſcribed as Ordinary Towns, ſome of which held of the King, and Others of other Lords; only Exeter is call'd a Borough, and deſcribed by it ſelf. Totnais is call'd a Borough, under the Title of Terra Judhael de Totnais; and Ochementone (I ſuppoſe now Okehampton) a Burgh under the Title of Baldwin the Sheriff; no other Name (ſaith the Doctor) of the preſent Burghs to be found in this County in Domes-day-Book, unleſs, as hath been noted before, thoſe which are placed under the Title of Terra Regis.

|| Ibid. 43. In Wiltſhire, || He can find none, but thoſe that were reckon'd under Terra Regis, the particular Names of which I need not ſet down; ſo that he can find no other Names of the preſent Burghs in the Deſcription of Wiltſhire, but ſuch as were Antient Demeſnes.

And ſo it is in other Shires and Counties; ſuch eſpecially as have now many Burghs in them, as Somerſetſhire, Hampſhire, Suſſex, Lancaſhire and Yorkſhire; in every of theſe, there are now ſeveral real or reputed Burghs, whoſe Names are not to be found in the Conqueror's Survey.

* Ibid. * And therefore we are next to ſhew, or at leaſt make a probable Conjecture what the Original of many (if not all) our preſent Burghs was; which to me ſeems to have been only from Charters. We will begin with thoſe of Cornwall, which are moſt obſcure, and then Inſtance in ſome others.

He firſt mentions the Town of Helleſton, and refers us to King

Append. N. 8. p. 15. † John's Charter in his Appendix, wherein He grants, that the Borough of Helleſton ſhall be a Free-Borough, and that his Burgeſſes of the ſame Town ſhall have Gilda Mercatoria, a Trading Gild, and ſhould be acquitted thro' his whole Realm of Toll, Pontage, Paſſage, Stallage, Leſtage, &c. From which it appears, that this Town was a Borough before it was made a Free-Borough; only by the Grant of this Trading-Gild, they were now made a Corporation which they were not before, and had other Priviledges alſo granted them: not but the Inhabitants might buy and ſell in their Mercate as they were a Common Borough (paying the King's Duties) before ever this Charter was granted, and that Ordinary Boroughs had Mercates before ſuch Charters were made, appears by what the Doctor himſelf hath cited in the Page aforegoing, from Domes-day-Book, concerning the Borough of Ochementone. Baldwinus Vicecomes Tenet Ochementone de Rege, ubi ſedet Caſtellum, ibi quatuor Burgenſes, & Mercatum valet IV. Solidos (i. e.) Baldwin, the Sheriff holds Ochementone of the King, where there is a Caſtle, and Four Burgeſſes, and a Mercate that yields four Shillings, that is, ſo much Toll by the year.

Ibid.

The Doctor's next Inſtance, is, the Town of Truro, or Truru, which was ſome time the poſſeſſion of Richard de Lucy, a Perſon of great Note in the Reigns of King Stephen and Henry the Second; in the Eighth of whoſe Reign, he was made Juſtice of England. From him it came to Reginald Fitz-Roy, who was one of the Illegitimate Sons of King Henry the Firſt, and was created Earl of Cornwall by King Stephen, in the Fifth of his Reign, and died in the 21*ſt* of Henry the Second. He by his Charter granted to his Free-Burgeſſes of Triuereu, that they ſhould have all their Free Cuſtoms, and ſuch as were uſed in Cities, and the ſame in all things which they had in the time of Richard de Lucy, (that is to ſay) Sac. Soc. Tol. Them, and Infrangenetheuf, and granted them, that they ſhould not plead, or be proſecuted in Hundred or County Courts, nor for any Summons ſhould go any where to any Law-Buſineſs without the Town of Triuereu, &c. From which it is evident, that this Town of Triuereu or Truro was a Free-Borough, before the Grant of this Charter, and might have been ſo (as far as I know) before the Conqueſt, ſo that the reſt of the Priviledges there mention'd, that were added over and above, did not make it a Free-Borough.

I have been the larger in tranſcribing this, becauſe it may ſerve for a Pattern for all other Boroughs of the like ſort; and it gives us a great deal of Light, what it was that then diſtinguiſhed a Free-Borough from another. I have no more to add concerning it, only that the ſame Charter was alſo confirm'd by King Henry the Second; as were both theſe by another of Inſpeximus by * Edward the Firſt.

* Chart. 13 Ed. I. M. 61.

The † Doctor's next Inſtance, is, a certain Charter granted by Richard Earl of Cornwal, Brother to King Henry the Third, whereby He made Dunheved or Lanceston a Free-Burgh, and amongſt other Liberties granted to the Burgeſſes to chooſe their own Bailiffs, who were to anſwer the Farm of the Burgh, which was to Himſelf an Hundred Shillings to the Priory of St. Stephen, in Lanceſton Sixty five Shillings and ten Pence, and to the Lepers of St. Leonard of Lanceſton, an Hundred Shillings of his Alms. By which, and alſo by their having leave to erect a Gildhall in the ſame Borough, it plainly appears, that by this Charter the Town of Lanceſton was made a Corporation. The reſt of the Charters of the ſaid Earl Richard, to make Liſcard a Free-Borough, and the like to Bodmin and Leſtwithiel, where by thoſe Places being made Free-Boroughs, do plainly ſhew, that each of them had granted them Gilda-Mercatoria, or a Trading-Gild; by all which, and by thoſe that follow in the following Pages, it is Evident, that where-ever there was a Free-Borough, there was alſo erected a Community or Corporation for the governing and carrying on the Trade within the ſaid Free-Boroughs.

And

Idem p. 46. And the Doctor hath here given only one Example of a Town, that was only made a Borough, which is Preſton in Lancaſhire, and was made ſo by King Henry the Second; yet had New Liberties granted by King John, when Earl of Moreton and Lancaſter, confirm'd by King Henry the Third, and Edward the Third. And by this laſt Charter it appears, that they had the ſame Priviledges granted them, which had been granted to the Burgeſſes of Briſtol, by which it ſeems they were alſo made a Free-Borough or Town-Corporate.

I paſs by the reſt of the Charters he has there cited, which are of the ſame kind; only in Confirmation of what I have now ſaid, ſhall tranſcribe the Doctor's Obſervation upon this Head.

Idem 47. From theſe Inſtances we may make a more than probable Conjecture, that all Free-Burghs, though now never ſo obſcure, had their beginnings from Charter, which was granted as well for the Advantage of the King, Earl, or Other Great Man, Lord of the Burgh, as for the profit of the Burgeſſes themſelves. For a Free-Burgh, in the true ſenſe of the word, was only a Town of Free-Trading with a Merchant-Gild, or Community, without paying Toll, Pontage, Paſſage, Stallage, &c. and being free from certain Fines or Mulcts, from Suit to Hundred and County-Courts, or being proſecuted or Anſwering there, or any where elſe, but within their own Burgh, except in Pleas of the Crown: With other Priviledges, Liberties and Cuſtoms, according to the Tenor of their particular Grants and Charters. And a Free Burgeſs was no other, than a Man that exerciſed Free Trade, according to the Liberties and Priviledges of his Burgh, whether he reſided in it, or whether he had Liberty to live and trade other where.

With which Concluſion of the Doctor's, I have no great occaſion to find fault, ſince he grants enough for my purpoſe, that a Free-Borough was only a Borough of Free-Trading with a Merchant-Gild, Community, or Corporation, and was exempt from the foreſaid Duties, and from certain Fines or Mulcts, and from Suit to Hundred, and County-Courts, or being proſecuted or Anſwering there, or any where elſe, but within their own Burgh, except in Pleas of the Crown. From all which it plainly appears, that every Free-Borough was a Town-Corporate, and it will alſo follow, that being by their Charters exempted from Suit to the Hundred and County-Courts, they could have nothing to do in the choice of Knights of Shires, and conſequently could not be taxed with the Community or Body of the County; and from thence it muſt naturally follow, that if there were nothing elſe in it but this, theſe Free-Boroughs required to have ſome Repreſentatives in Parliament to Grant Taxes for them, and to Conſent to ſuch Laws as ſhould oblige the whole Nation; ſince the Cities, Free-Boroughs, and other Ordinary Boroughs of England were too Great and Opulent a Body of Men to be Taxed or Talliated either by the King, or their own Particular Lords Spiritual or Temporal, towards the publick Occaſions of the King and Kingdom, without their own Conſents. Therefore ſince theſe Free-Boroughs were many of them created before the Norman Conqueſt, as divers Others of them were afterwards, it was neceſſary that even in the times of the Engliſh-Saxon Kings, or at leaſt as ſoon as the Rigid and Arbitrary Government of King William the Firſt, and his three Succeſſors began to abate, that they ſhould have their Repreſentatives in Parliament for the ends abovemention'd.

And we find about the ſame time, that the Royal-Boroughs of Scotland, and the Cities and Great Trading-Towns of France ſent their Burgeſſes or Deputies to their Great Councils or Parliaments, many years before the Reign of Edward the Firſt, when the Doctor will allow them to have been firſt ſummon'd to our like Aſſemblies in England. But ſince he endeavours to put off this neceſſary Conſequence, by ſuppoſing that before their Appearance in Parliament, they were liable to be Taxed or Talliated at the pleaſure of the King, or ſome other Immediate Lord that held under Him; I ſhall in the next place conſider what the Doctor hath further advanced upon that Head.

* Upon Account of theſe Liberties, ſays the Doctor, the Prince, or Lord of the Burgh, received Toll and Cuſtoms for the Goods bought and ſold, or in proceſs of time a Fee-Farm-Rent or Annual Compoſition in a ſtated Sum, always leſs than the true value, in lieu of them. And a reaſonable Talliage or Aid, when for his neceſſity He had reaſon to impoſe it. And that Talliage was due and paid by Citizens and Burgeſſes to our Antient Kings, only in Conſideration of their Liberty of Buying, Selling and Trading, and the Liberties they had granted them to that purpoſe, and ſo to do will be clearly evinced by what follows.

* Ib. p. 47.

† In the Eleventh of Henry the Third, New-Sarum was made a City by the King's Letters Patents, and given to the then Biſhop, his Succeſſors and Canons there, and their Succeſſors, as their proper Demeſne, which Clauſe is thus tranſlated. We further grant to the ſaid Biſhop and his Succeſſors, that for the neceſſity of himſelf or his Church, he might take a reaſonable Talliage or Aid of his Citizens, when the King or his Heirs made a reaſonable Talliage in his Demeſnes.

Ibid.
† Ryley's Placit Parliamentar. f. 271.

And for the proof of this the || Doctor further cites from the ſame Record, that in the 33d year of Edward the Firſt, the Biſhop of Salisbury requiring an Aid or Talliage of the Citizens of New-Sarum, according to the Grant of Henry the Third, the Citizens refuſed payment; but upon application of the Biſhop to the King, He granted his Precept to the Sheriff of Wiltſhire, to ſummon by two Legal Men, the Mayor and Community, (not all the Burgeſſes, but the governing part) of New-Sarum, to appear before Him and his Council at Weſtminſter, to ſhew Cauſe why they ought not to be Talliated, according to the Charter and Grant aforeſaid.

|| Ibid. f. 273.

After which follows a long Account of the Pleading and Proceſs between the Biſhop and the Citizens of New-Sarum; wherein after hearing the Reaſons and Pleadings on both ſides, the King gave this Sentence, that the Citizens ſhould be for that time Talliated, for the Profit they had received by their Liberties from the time of the firſt Grant of their Charter, until then. And afterward chooſe whether they would uſe their Liberties, and be Talliated according to their Charter for the future, or renounce them, and not be Talliated: whereupon the Citizens did chooſe to renounce their Liberties, and a few days after ſurrender'd them to the King by the Hands of their Mayor.

The Iſſue of this was, that after the ſaid Renunciation, the Citizens being reconcil'd to their Biſhop, he and they joyn'd in a Petition to the King, wherein reciting the former Charter from King Henry, and their late Renunciation of the Liberties therein granted, they humbly requeſted to have them regranted to them, on Condition to ſubmit to pay Talliage by the Biſhop, in the ſame manner as was in the former Grant; upon which the King gave them a New Charter, upon the ſame Conditions as his Father had granted them before.

Ibid. p. 49. From which Proceſs and Judgment, the Doctor draws the following Obſervation, viz. that the Emolument and Profit mention'd in this Judgment and Charter, did ariſe from Buying, Selling, and Trading; and the Liberties (by Reaſon whereof the Citizens were Talliated) there ſpoken of, were granted for the Furtherance and Incouragement of them, which all Free-Citizens and Free-Burgeſſes injoy'd as Members of a Free-City or Burgh. And 'tis evident they were called Free-Cities (or more frequently) Free-Burghs, and the Members thereof Free-Citizens and Free-Burgeſſes (almoſt in all Charters) from theſe Liberties and Free trading only, notwithſtanding they were liable to reaſonable Talliage impoſed by the King, when his neceſſity required it; and from their paying a Fee-Farm-Rent, and being obnoxious to the King's Talliage, either expreſs'd, or implied in the Charters, by the Profit received, moſt of the Cities or Burghs in England were called Civitates & Burgi Dominici Regis, as his Demeſne-Lands, were called Terræ Regis Dominicæ, and the Tenants of them Tenentes Regis Dominici, for the ſame Reaſon, and for others as before hath been ſaid.

I will not deny, but that much of what the Doctor here ſays is true, concerning Free-Cities or Free-Boroughs, when they had ſuch Priviledges granted them as he mentions; but I ſuppoſe he could not deny (if he were now alive) that thoſe Priviledges he mentions were not Eſſential to a City or Borough; for no doubt but the City of New-Sarum would have continued to have ſent Members to Parliament, as it had already done in this King's Reign, notwithſtanding their Surrender of their Priviledges above-mention'd into the King's Hands; and ſo likewiſe thoſe Free-Boroughs, if they had been Boroughs before (as moſt of them were) would have had ſtill a Right to ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament, notwithſtanding the Priviledge of a Gilda Mercatoria, with thoſe other Liberties granted by thoſe Charters, had ~~that~~ never been granted them at all; or that the King had ſeized them into his own Hands as forfeited: ſince they were only for the carrying on of their Trade to Greater Advantage, but were not abſolutely neceſſary to their being a City or Burgh. And if thoſe that held of the King were liable to be Talliated by Him, yet it was only in reſpect of thoſe Liberties and Priviledges they thereby enjoy'd; and in conſideration of which, as the Doctor allows, the King or any other Inferior Lord had a Power to Talliate them, when the King Talliated his Demeſnes; and theſe being once ſurrender'd or forfeited, the King or the Lord's Right to Talliate them ought to have ceaſed; all which appears by this Judgment ment between the Biſhop and the Citizens of New-Sarum: And tho' the King might Talliate ſuch Free-Cities and Boroughs, yet it was not to be exerciſed wantonly, and upon every ſlight occaſion, but only when the neceſſities of the Kingdom requir'd it; and when it was exerciſed otherwiſe, it was looked upon as a Grievance.

I do not doubt, but King Edward the Firſt, going about to renew this Cuſtom, in the 33*d* year of his Reign, it proved the Cauſe of that famous Statute de Tallagio non Concedendo, which was made the year following, ſince it is very probable, that the Cities and Boroughs of Antient Demeſne found it to lie very heavy upon them to be double-Taxed in one and the ſame year, firſt by the King's Prerogative, and then by their Repreſentatives in Parliament.

But as for ſuch Talliages as were paid to the Earls of Cornwall, and Dukes of Lancaſter, and to the Biſhop of Salisbury, and other Temporal Lords, as in the Record laſt cited, I ſhall make ſome Obſervations upon what the Doctor hath concluded from thoſe Charters.

Firſt, it appears from thoſe granted by the Earls of Cornwall, that they reſerved to themſelves a Power of Talliating ſuch Towns or Boroughs, as they thereby created Free-Boroughs, but then this was only in reſpect of the Trading Priviledges, and other Liberties which were thereby conferr'd, and not as they were a Borough; for I think I may truly affirm, that the Greater part of thoſe Towns that now ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament, were never in that County made Free-Boroughs by Charter, nor had any Corporations erected in them, and I think theſe are altogether as Antient, if not more Antient, than the Free-Boroughs, ſince theſe can only claim that Priviledge by Charter, whereas the others do it by Preſcription; though by this Preſcription I would not be ſo underſtood, as if that Priviledge did not at firſt ariſe either by Grant or Charter of ſome of the Engliſh-Saxon Kings, or elſe of ſome others ſince the Conqueſt: But thoſe Charters being long ſince loſt, and not to be found upon Record, and they having alſo ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament time beyond Memory, have now nothing to ſhew but Preſcription for ſuch their Liberty.

And of this Barnſtable in Devonſhire may ſerve for an evident Example, which having loſt a Charter granted them by King Athelſtan, * petition'd King Edward the Third, and his Council in Parliament in the 14 ~~Seventeenth~~ year of his Reign, wherein the ſaid Town ſets forth, that they had been a Free-Borough, à tempore cujus contrarii Memoria non exiſtit; and as ſuch had enjoy'd divers Liberties, and Free-Cuſtoms by a Charter of King Athelſtan, and this among others, quod ad ſingula Parliamenta Noſtra, & dictorum Anteceſſorum Noſtrorum Duos Burgenſes pro Communitate ejuſdem Burgi mittere ſolebant; and therefore that Charter being loſt, they deſired a Confirmation of it from the King, who thereupon † directed a Writ of Enquiry to ſeveral Gentlemen, and Others therein mention'd, to examine whether the ſaid Burgeſſes had enjoy'd all thoſe Liberties ſo granted by the ſaid Charter of King Athelſtan, or not.

And by the || Return of this Commiſſion, it appears, firſt, that there were Free-Boroughs in England before the Conqueſt, which the Doctor will not allow of. Secondly, that they ſent two Burgeſſes to all all Parliaments of the King and his Progenitors, which is a Claim by Preſcription, though their Charter were loſt. And Laſtly, that the King and his Council in Parliament, allow'd the matter of their Claim to be true, or elſe they would not have thought it worth their while to have iſſued out a Second Commiſſion to enquire into the truth of it, and to make their report to the King and his ſaid Council.

But to add ſomething more concerning the Right which the Earls and Lords of thoſe Free-Boroughs reſerved to themſelves of Talliating them in the manner aforeſaid, this was only as they had the Dominion of thoſe Earldoms granted them by the King as Count Palatines; which may appear by the Grants of the Earls of Cornwall abovemention'd, in ſome of whoſe Charters they tie themſelves and their Heirs from Talliating the ſaid Boroughs, when the King Talliates his Boroughs throughout England, and in others of thoſe Charters there is no mention of any Right reſerved to Talliate them at all: in which Caſe I do ſuppoſe they were diſcharged from having any ſuch Tax laid upon them, as is pretty plain by this Caſe of the Biſhop of Salisbury above-mention'd; where he founds his Claim of Talliating the City of New-Sarum, not a Town built by his Predeceſſors, and holding their Houſes within the ſaid City of him, but purely from that Clauſe inſerted in the King's Charter, wherein that Power is particularly reſerved, and that the Citizens had themſelves agreed to it. And yet the Biſhop had been ſo favourable to them in the Exerciſe of this Power, that from the Eleventh of Henry the Third, when New-Sarum was made a City by the King's Letter's-Patents, to the three and thirtieth of Edward the Firſt, when the Biſhop firſt Talliated them, it was above Threeſcore years; during which time, tho' the preſent King and his Father had frequently Talliated their Demeſnes, yet they had paſſed hitherto without any ſuch Payment.

To conclude, I ſhall now leave it to the Reader's Judgment to Determine, whether moſt of the Cities and Boroughs of England were the King's Cities and Boroughs, in the ſame ſenſe and manner as his Demeſne-Lands were called Terræ Regis Dominicæ, as the Doctor hath aſſerted. For it plainly appears by what he hath tranſcribed from Domeſday-Book, as alſo from the Charters he hath cited of the King's of England, and Earls of Cornwall, that not a Third part of the Boroughs they made, were the King's Antient-Demeſnes, at the time of the Conqueſt, if any will give themſelves the leiſure to examine the Doctor's Liſt of theſe Boroughs in this Treatiſe upon which I animadvert. And every one that underſtands any thing of the Law muſt needs know, that no Lands are looked upon as part of the Antient Demeſne of the Crown, which was not ſo, when that famous Survey of the King's Towns and Demeſnes in England was recorded in Domeſday-Book.

Having diſpatched this Head, I ſhall now proceed to the reſt of what the Doctor hath there deliver'd concerning the Right of Electing and Returning Citizens and Burgeſſes to Parliament, where he ſays as follows; * 'I ſhall conclude this Treatiſe with the Anſwers 'to theſe two Queſtions.

Firſt,

* Ibid. p. 51.

‘ Firſt, who named them, and by whoſe Direction and Appointment it was, that ſuch, or ſuch Burghs choſe, and ſent Burgeſſes or Members to Parliament, and no others?

‘ Secondly, who then were, or ought to be Electors, in Real, or Reputed Burghs?

‘ To the Firſt, it was left to the Sheriff of each County, to Name and Direct * which were Burghs, and which were not, by thoſe Indefinite and General words in the Writ. De Qualibet Civitate Duos Cives & de quolibet Burgo Duos Burgenſes, &c. eligi facias, &c. i.e. cauſe to be choſen two Citizens of every City, and two Burgeſſes of every Burgh.

In anſwer to this, I muſt allow the Sheriff of each County to Name and Direct his Precepts to the Antient Boroughs; not that it ever was in his power to create New ones, nor had he a Right to exempt the Old ones from ſending Members if they deſired it, for he was to act only as a Miniſterial Officer, and not as a Judge: and if he refuſed to ſend his Precepts, or to make Returns of the Elections of thoſe Cities and Boroughs, he was liable to be complain'd of to the King and his Council in Parliament, as appears by the Petition of the Town of St. Albans already mention'd to King Edward the Second, againſt the Sheriff of Hertfordſhire, for refuſing to return the Burgeſſes they had choſen. We ſhall now examine the Proofs † he brings for it, as follows.

‘ The firſt * Returns extant of Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes, are in the twenty Sixth of Edward the Firſt, and in that of Wiltſhire for that year Annexed to the Writ, there were returned two Knights for the County, two Citizens for New-Sarum, two Burgeſſes for Dounton, two Burgeſſes for the Devizes, two for the Burgh of Chippenham, and two for Malmesbury, with their Manucaptors; and the Writ was ſent to the Conſtable of Merleberge (that is the Conſtable of the Caſtle there) And to the Bailiffs of the Liberty of Caln and Worthe, who return'd no Anſwer. To the City of New-Sarum, and theſe ſix other Burghs, the Sheriff of this year made his Precepts, and for them only made his Returns.

I cannot ſee by what the Doctor has here laid down, how the Sheriff was left to judge what Towns were Boroughs; for tho' he had ſent a Precept to the Conſtable of Merleberge, and the Bailiffs of Caln and Worthe, yet he could have no Anſwer, that is, they had neglected to cauſe any Burgeſſes to be choſen, and therefore the Sheriff could not do more than lay in his power, to make his Return of Burgeſſes for thoſe Places from whence there had been no Returns made to him, or perhaps were out of his Liberty or Bailywick to make any ſuch Returns at all, they having the Return of all Writs within themſelves. But what follows I confeſs is more material, when the Doctor proves from ſeveral Returns of Sheriffs, which are ſtill upon Record, that in the Counties of Wilts, Bucks, Gloceſter and Worceſterſhires, from the Twelfth year of Edward the Third, to almoſt the end of his Reign, the Sheriff often took a Liberty to Return ſometimes more, and ſometimes fewer Burgeſſes for thoſe Counties, and yet ſtill they made the ſame Returns, non ſunt Plures Civitates, neque Burgi infra Ballivam meam, that there were no more Cities, nor Burghs within his Bailiwick: That is, within the County, notwithſtanding all the Towns the Doctor there names, had been reputed antient Boroughs, and as ſuch had ſometime or other ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament, for which he alſo cites ſeveral Records, and then proceeds thus.

Ibid. p. 54. See Returns of theſe ſoveral Counties in Pryn's Parliamentary Regiſter. Part 2.

'And ſo it was in Yorkſhire, Lincolnſhire, Cornwall, Dorſet, Devon, Somerſet, Southampton, Surry, Suſſex, and moſt if not all Counties in England, where there were, at the time of the Returns, any ſmall, poor, inconſiderable Burghs, and where the Sheriffs were more or leſs kind to them, they return'd or omitted them at Pleaſure, and for all whatever I could find, notwithſtanding all my Endeavours, without the direction of the King or his Council.

Stat. at large,* 5 Rich. 2 Cap. 4. p. 169.

'In the Fifth of Richard the Second, there was a Law made, * that if any Sheriff of the Realm ſhould be from thence forth negligent in making his Returns of Writs of the Parliament, or that he ſhould leave out of the ſaid Returns any Cities or Boroughs, which be bound, and of old time were wont to come to the Parliament, he ſhall be puniſhed in the manner as was accuſtomed to be done in the ſaid Caſe in the ſaid time paſt. But notwithſtanding this Law, the Practice of the Sheriffs remained the ſame it was before, as will be proved by what ſhall in part next be ſaid concerning the meaning and reaſon of theſe Returns.

As I cannot deny the matter of Fact, that the Sheriffs did often times neglect to return Burgeſſes for divers of the meaner or poorer ſort of Boroughs, when coming to Parliaments was found a great Charge to their reſpective Towns, and who on that Account were taxed as Boroughs, at a higher Rate than other Towns of the County; ſo I ſhall not deny, but that when-ever the Sheriffs did this, it was looked upon as a fault which deſerved puniſhment; and this the Doctor's Friends muſt own from this Statute, which was made to prevent it, ſince by ſuch a Practice the Houſe of Commons was not only deprived of its compleat Number of Members, but the King was alſo defeated of his Aid or Taxes by the Sheriffs excuſing thoſe Boroughs, who were then wont to pay (as the Doctor obſerves) about a Third part more than the reſt of the Inhabitants of the County.

But he ſays further, that notwithſtanding this Statute of Richard the Second, the Practice of the Sheriffs continued ſtill the ſame: ſupſoſe it did; pray, is it the leſs a fault, becauſe it was not puniſh'd ſo often as it ſhould have been? But ſince the Doctor here endeavours to give a plauſible Reaſon to excuſe the Sheriffs for acting thus, and why they were connived at, I ſhall from him tranſcribe the following Paragraphs.

Ibid p. 55.

'When the Sheriffs made their Returns, that there was not any, or more Cities and Burghs in ſuch or ſuch Counties, than for which they had returned Burgeſſes, no Man can believe they were ſo ignorant, as not to know, there were other Burghs, or more than they had returned Burgeſſes for, and therefore ſome other than the very literal meaning of thoſe Words muſt be found out.

'And to my Apprehenſion, the reaſons (which alſo ſhew the meaning) of theſe Returns in theſe words, Non eſt aliqua Civitas vel aliquis Burgus, or non ſunt plures Civitates vel Burgi, (than what were return'd) in Balliva mea, was for that many times, there was no ‘ able, fit, Perſons for that Service to be found in the other Burghs of the County, at the time of the Return, (the choice being always made in thoſe days out of their own Body, and not of Foreigners or Country-Gentlemen) and Secondly, for that the Burghs were ſo poor, as they were not able to pay the Burgeſſes their Wages or Expences.

Retorn. Brev. Parl. 21 E. 3. Devon.

‘ This Aſſertion ſeems to be manifeſtly evinced by ſome other Returns made in different words, tho' of the ſame Senſe and Import, in 21 Ed. 3. after the Burgeſſes return'd for Exon, Barnſtable, Plympton, Tavyſtock, Toryton, and Totnes, The Sheriff of Devonſhire cloſeth his Return with theſe words, Non ſunt plures Civitates vel Burgi in Balliva mea quæ retornari poſſunt. There are not any more Cities or Burghs in my Bailywick, which can be returned, thereby omitting all other Burghs in that County; by theſe Words it ſhould ſeem, that either there were no Burgeſſes fit or qualified for the Service of Parliament, in the other Burghs, or that they were ſo poor, as they could not bear the Expences of ſuch as ſhould ſerve for them; for the Sheriff denies not, that there were more Burghs in his County, but affirms they were ſuch as could not be Returned, and if not for theſe, 'tis hard to imagine, for what other Reaſons they were ſuch.

Ibid. In thoſe years. Wigorn.

‘ In the Returns from Worceſterſhire in the 8*th* and 12*th* of Edward the Second, and 12*th*, and 14*th* of Edward the Third, the Sheriff ends them thus, after the Returns of Knights for the County, and Citizens for Worceſter (which I give you in Engliſh) there is not any Burgh in my Bailywick, from whence any Burgeſſes can come to Parliament, for the Reaſons without doubt above-mention'd, tho' Wyche (now Droitwich) had ſent Burgeſſes to Parliament in 26, 28, 29, and 30 of Edward the Firſt, and in 2 and 4 of Edward the Second, and in 28, 29 of Edward the Firſt, they received their Expences as appears by the Writs, de Expenſis Militum, Civium & Burgenſium, then directed to the Bailiffs of that Town, and are to be found in the Cloſe-Rolls in thoſe years.

In the two next Pages the Doctor gives us divers Precedents of the like Omiſſions, of the Returns of Boroughs in the Counties of Cornwall, Devon, Lancaſter and Lincoln, wherein the Sheriffs after their Returns of ſome Boroughs there mention'd, omitting divers others that had formerly ſent Members to Parliament, as Lancaſter and Preſton for example, for whom the Sheriffs made the like Returns as before, Non ſunt alii Burgi in Balliva mea, the meaning of which Return, particularly for the two Towns laſt mention'd he ſuppoſes to be ſhew'd, in the 38*th* of Edward the Third, when the Sheriff of Lancaſhire after the Return of the Knights, gives the reaſon why Citizens and Burgeſſes ought not, nor were wont to come, in theſe words, that there were not any Citizens or Burghs within that County, from which any Citizens or Burgeſſes ought, or were wont to come to the ſaid Parliament, for, or by reaſon of their Inability or Poverty. The like Return was made by the Sheriff of this County, in the 39*th* and 50*th* of Edward the Third. And the Returns of this County are cloſed after this manner, with ſome ſmall variation in the Reigns of Edward the Third, Richard the Second, Henry the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth, and Edward the Fourth, and and no Burgeſſes return'd for any Town or Towns in all that time, from the 33*d* of Edward the Third, which was 124 years, and how much longer cannot well be known: And then the Doctor gives ſome Preſidents of theſe Returns in every King's Reign; from all which Inſtances and Examples, he makes this General Obſervation, viz.

Ibid. p. 59. 'By theſe few Returns and Inſtances of very many more which might have been produced, if needful, 'tis abundantly proved, that from the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt, when the firſt Writs were ſent forth for the choice of Citizens and Burgeſſes, and alſo during the Reigns of Edward the Second and Third, Richard the Second, Henry the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth, and Edward the Fourth, it was left to the Diſcretion and Judgment of the Sheriffs, which Burghs were fit and able to ſend Burgeſſes, and which not. And that if antient able Burghs became Poor and Indigent, and unable to pay the Expences of their Burgeſſes, or had none fit to chuſe, it was a juſt Ground for the Sheriff to excuſe them, from the trouble and charge of Electing, and ſending Burgeſſes, notwithſtanding the Statutes of 5 Richard, 2 C. 4. 1 Hen. 5. C. 1. 8 Hen. 6. C. 7. 23 Hen. 6. C. 15. And alſo, That the plain Negative Returns, of Non ſunt aliqui Civitates vel Burgi in Balliva mea, or Non ſunt plures Civitates vel Burgi in Comitatu Prædicto, &c. are to be explain'd by thoſe other Returns, of Non ſunt aliquæ Civitates, vel aliqua Civitas, nec plures Burgi (in this or that County) unde Cives vel Burgenſes venire facere poſſum, or unde Cives & Burgenſes venire poſſunt, vel venire debent, vel venire ſolebant, and other different Expreſſions before mentioned, Propter debilitatem eorum & paupertatem. Thoſe Abſolute Negatives in Terms only, being equivalent in Signification to the other, and import no more, than, that thoſe Burghs the Sheriffs did not return, at ſuch times, were poor and inconſiderable, and that either they had not fit Perſons to ſend, or for their Poverty could not pay their Wages, or bear the Expences by Law due to them. And all this was done by Virtue of that General Clauſe in the Writs, De qualibet Civitate duos Cives, & de quolibet Burgo duos Burgenſes, &c. For in the Charters of Antient Burghs, there was no Clauſe or Grant for the choice or ſending of Burgeſſes to Parliament, nor have I ever ſeen or heard of any particular Directions from the King and Council, or others, to the Sheriffs, for the ſending their Precepts to this or that Burgh only, and not to others.

Now I have fairly tranſcribed the Doctor's Opinion, and the Authorities he hath given us for it: I ſhall in the next place examine whether the Evidence He hath brought will Juſtifie his Concluſion, that it was wholy left to the Diſcretion and Judgment of the Sheriffs, which Burghs were fit and able to ſend Burgeſſes, and which not; and notwithſtanding thoſe ſeveral Statutes which he himſelf has mention'd, that were made on purpoſe to prevent it. For beſides his fundamental Errour, that the firſt Writs of Summons for the choice of Citizens and Burgeſſes, were iſſued out in the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt, (which I hope I have already confuted) I cannot ſee what Right the Sheriff of any County could claim to exerciſe ſo arbitrary a Juriſdiction: It could not be by Common-Law, for that is only Antient Cuſtom, and the Doctor will not allow any Citizens and Burgeſſes to be ſummon'd to Parliament, from the 49*th* of Henry the Third, to the year abovemention'd; and that in the 49*th*, being but once (according to the Doctor's Tenet) could never create a Cuſtom; neither could it be by any Statute, for all thoſe (as he acknowledges likewiſe) are directly againſt him, and that of the 5*th* of Richard the Second, which the Doctor himſelf hath cited, ſufficiently declares againſt him, ſince it is thereby provided, ' that ' if any Sheriff of the Realm ſhould be from thenceforth negligent ' in making his Returns of Writs of the Parliament, or that he ' ſhould leave out in the ſaid Returns, any Cities or Burghs, which ' be bound, and of old time were wont to come to the Parliament, he ' ſhall be puniſhed in manner, as was accuſtomed to be done in the ' ſaid Caſe, in the ſaid time paſt.

Upon which Statute, I cannot but ask the Doctor's Friends, whether it is not plain from thence, that the Citizens and Burgeſſes were of old Time obliged to come to Parliaments, (that is, to be ſummon'd to them) in the French, it is d'Ancientè, from time of Antiquity, which muſt have been for above a Hundred years at leaſt; whereas if the firſt conſtant appearing of Citizens and Burgeſſes in Parliament, were but in the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt, it follows, that from that time to the 5*th* of Richard the Second, was not fourſcore and five years, and that being within the memory of many Men then alive, could not be called of old or antient Time; and what is yet more evident, the firſt clauſe of this Statute, makes no diſtinction between the Antiquity of the Biſhops and Lords being ſummon'd to Parliament, and that of the Commons, ſince it is there expreſly enacted, ' that all and ſingular Perſons and Communities, which from * ' henceforth ſhall for time to come have Summons of Parliament, ' ſhall come as before to Parliament, in the manner as they are ' bound to do, and hath been accuſtomed within the Realm of Eng' land of old time; and whatever Perſon of the ſaid Realm, who ' from henceforth ſhall have the ſaid Summons (be he Archbiſhop, ' Biſhop, Abbot, Prior, Duke, Earl, Baron, Banneret, Knight of the Shire, ' Citizen of City, Burgeſs of Burgh, or other ſingular Perſon or Com' munity) do abſent himſelf, and come not at the ſaid Summons, ' (except he may reaſonably, and lawfully excuſe himſelf to our So' vereign Lord the King) he ſhall be amerced, and otherwiſe pu' niſhed according as of Old Times hath been uſed to be done within ' the ſaid Realm in the like Caſe. And then follows the Clauſe above cited, concerning Sheriffs; but the former part of this Statute the Doctor hath omitted for Reaſons eaſie enough to be gueſſed at.

* i. e. the Communities or civil Bodies of Counties and Cities and Boroughs.

I ſhall now make ſome Obſervations on theſe Clauſes in this Statute: Firſt, that both the Lords and Commons are alike liable to be amerced (that is, fined to the King) if they ſhall neglect to come to Parliament, and that, according as of old, or antient Time, had been uſed; which ſhews, that both the coming of the Lords, Peers and Commons are expreſſed in this Statute as of like Antiquity, and the Puniſhment to be alſo the ſame for their not appearing upon Summons. Secondly, that Sheriffs in Caſe they neglect to make due Returns of ſuch Cities and Boroughs as were bound to come to Parliament of Old Time, ſhall be puniſhed as has been accuſtom'd in time: paſt ſo that there is not only a Cuſtom here aſſerted for the Citizens and Burgeſſes coming to Parliament, but alſo for the Puniſhment of the Sheriffs; which ſhews, that they had been frequently fined and amerced for ſuch refuſal or neglect, tho' the Caſes concerning it do not appear in the Year-Books: By this then it is plain, that the Doctor is miſtaken in his Aſſertion, that it was wholy left to the Diſcretion and Judgment of the Sheriffs, which Burghs were fit and able to ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament, and which not.

And ſuppoſe the Sheriff of any County, inſtead of excuſing a poor Borough, had for favour omitted to ſummon a Rich and Able one, can any Man think that he had not been liable to the Petition or Complaint of ſuch a Borough, and alſo, according to this Statute, to be puniſhed or amerced for ſo doing?

But perhaps will ſtill be urged by thoſe of the other ſide; if this Statute, or any other had taken any effect, how comes it to paſs, as appears from theſe Precedents cited by the Doctor, that the Sheriffs did continue to make the ſame Returns, and to excuſe many poor Boroughs, as well after this Statute, as before? Sure they would not have dared to have done ſo, had not this Statute never, (or at leaſt very rarely) been put in execution: But to this I anſwer, that the Common practice of a thing forbidden by Law, or the ſeldom executing the Penalty upon Offenders, does not give them a Right to break it at their Diſcretion, as was ſeen in the Act for Conformity, in the Reign of King Charles the Second, before He began to order a more ſtrict execution of that Law upon all ſuch Diſſenters as were taken at Conventicles; the like I may ſay concerning the Statute of Carriers, travelling on the Road with more than five Horſes in their Waggons, which tho' ſometimes put in Execution, yet does not deter Offenders from doing it notwithſtanding; ſo likewiſe tho' divers Sheriffs in the times the Doctor mentions, did often make falſe Returns, and omit the ſending their Precepts to ſuch poor Boroughs as they had a mind to excuſe, yet that did not give thoſe Sheriffs any Right ſo to do, ſince ſuch poor Boroughs (as the Doctor allows in the Caſe of Toriton) might upon Petition to the King have been excuſed from ſending Burgeſſes to Parliament for ever; for otherwiſe if the Sheriff ſhould have exerciſed ſuch a Power of Right (as the Doctor ſuppoſes) and that from the General words in the Writs, de qualibet Civitate Duos Cives, & de quolibet Burgo duos Burgenſes, he might not only have excuſed what Boroughs he had pleaſed, but likewiſe ſent his Precepts to thoſe that never were Boroughs, and have thereby made them Parliamentary-Boroughs for ever, which would have given the Sheriffs of England as Great a Power as the King Himſelf, in creating new Boroughs at their Pleaſure.

Yet even this Opinion (as abſur'd as it is) Mr. Prynne endeavours to maintain in his third part of his Brevia Parliamentaria, or * Regiſter of Writs of Summons: I ſhall here give you the ſum of his Arguments. First he begins with the uncertain Returns of the Sheriffs for the Boroughs in their Reſpective Counties, they being ſometimes more, and ſometimes fewer, according as they pleas'd to favour thoſe Boroughs they had a mind to excuſe; which ſince it is but the ſame Argument, that has been made uſe of by Doctor Brady, I only mention it, having, I hope, return'd a ſufficient Anſwer ſwer to it already. Now that which only deſerves our Notice, is, how ſo many New Boroughs came to ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament in the Reigns of the two Edwards the Second and Third, and their Succeſſors, as low as the time of King Edward the Fourth? In anſwer to this therefore, it muſt be acknowledged, that in all thoſe Reigns there are not to be found any New Boroughs created by the Kings, Earls of Cornwall, or other Earl's, Charters to ſeveral Towns whereby they made them Free Boroughs, and gave them an enabling Clauſe to ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament; therefore this Priviledge or Duty (call it which you pleaſe) muſt have ariſen one of theſe two ways; either from Preſcription, but Mr. Prynne undertakes to prove, that they could not ſend by Preſcription, becauſe he ſuppoſes that there were no Citizens and Burgeſſes ſummoned to Parliament before the 49*th* of Henry the Third: Or it muſt (as he ſays) have proceeded from the meer Diſcretion or Judgment of the Sheriffs, to whom it was left to ſend their Precepts to what Towns they pleaſed that were then called, or look'd upon as Boroughs in Common Acceptation, without ever troubling themſelves to conſider what Right they had to that Title; and this he endeavours to make out from theſe following Inſtances.

Firſt, that in the latter end of King Edward the Firſt, there were but one hundred and twelve Cities and Boroughs in England (taking in the Cinque-Ports) which ſent Members to Parliament; yet that in the following Reigns we may find new Precepts iſſued by the Sheriffs and Returns made upon them, of no leſs than nineteen New-Boroughs, which (for ought as can be diſcover'd) never took upon them to elect or ſend any Burgeſſes before; beſides ſeveral other Precepts that were ſent to other reputed Boroughs, which yet made no Returns upon them.

Secondly, that tho' neither Richard the Second, Henry the Fourth, nor Henry the Fifth, ever made any New-Boroughs, yet that about the middle of Henry the Sixth's Reign, there were new Precepts ſent out for five New-Boroughs, which cannot be found to have ever ſent any Burgeſſes to Parliament before, viz. Gatton in Surrey, Heytesbury, Hyndford, Weſtbury and Wootton-Baſſet in Wiltſhire, which tho' but mean and inconſiderable Places, yet ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament at this day; and that in Edward the Fourth's Reign, there was but one New-Borough, which began to ſend Burgeſſes, viz. Grantham in Lincolnſhire, and had never ſent any before: And Mr. Prynne * further aſſerts, that there have been fourteen New Boroughs ſet up in Cornwall, and in other Counties no leſs then ſixty four erected, ſince the time of Edward the Fourth by the Practice of Sheriffs, ſet on by the Ambition of Private Gentlemen, ſeeking to be choſen Burgeſſes for them, and the Deſire the Burgeſſes of thoſe poor Towns had to chuſe them, who were courted and feaſted by them only for that purpoſe.

* Ib. p. 229, 230.

So that upon the whole matter † notwithſtanding what Others may conceive, (and what this Author himſelf once inclin'd to believe) that the Right of Cities and Boroughs to ſend Members to Parliament, might Originally proceed from ſome Antient Charters of former Kings, heretofore granted to them; yet ſince his diſcovery of the old Original Returns of Writs for electing Knights and Burgeſſes geſſes found by him in Cæſar's Chappel in the White Tower, he had rectified his former Miſtakes, being abundantly ſatisfied that neither bare Antient Cuſtom, nor Preſcription, before, or ſince the Conqueſt, nor our King's Charters, but the Sheriffs of each Counties Precepts and Returns of Elections of Citizens and Burgeſſes, for ſuch Cities and Boroughs as they thought meet, by Authority and Power granted them in, and by this general Clauſe, in the King's Writs of Summons to Parliament, iſſued to the Sheriffs of every County, before every Parliament, enjoyning them in theſe words, (which I here tranſlate) that they cauſe to be elected two Citizens out of each City, and two Burgeſſes out of each Borough to appear in Parliament, without deſigning which or how many Cities and Boroughs by name in each County ſhould have Precepts ſent to them to elect them: So that, according to him, from this general Direction, the Sheriff hath uſed a kind of Arbitrary Power in the execution of this general Clauſe, according as his Judgment guided, or his Favour, Affection, Partiality, Malice, influenced him, or the Solicitations of any private Boroughs to him, or of Competitors for Citizens or Burgeſſes places within his County, ſway'd him: this is moſt apparent by ſome Sheriffs in ſeveral Counties, returning more Boroughs and Burgeſſes than their Predeceſſors, others cauſing Elections and Returns to be made for ſuch New-Boroughs which never elected, or ſent any before, nor after their Sherifalties, as he thinks evident from P. 232. the Returns he there inſtances, which ſince they are alſo mention'd by Dr. Brady, I will not repeat.

This is the Sum of Mr. Prynne's Arguments and Authorities, who indeed carries this point a pretty way further than what the Doctor has done in his laſt Treatiſe; for whereas he aſſerts the Sheriff's Power from the General Clauſe above-mention'd, of omitting what Boroughs he pleas'd; Mr. Prynne maintains, that the Sheriffs had a Power not only of omitting, but alſo of naming, or rather creating new Boroughs at their Pleaſure; the falſhood of which Opinion I think will not prove hard to demonſtrate.

I ſhall not repeat what is already ſaid in Anſwer to the Doctor's Notion, only take notice, that it is built upon the ſame falſe Foundation with Mr. Pryn's, that the Sheriffs were impowr'd from that General and Indefinite Clauſe in their Writs of Summons, of uſing an Arbitrary Power, in iſſuing out their Precepts, and making their Returns to and from what Boroughs they pleas'd; which can no ways be warranted from thoſe General words; for the Sheriffs are thereby impower'd to cauſe two Citizens, and as many Burgeſſes to be choſen out of each City and Borough, that is, thoſe that were then known to be ſuch, and not to excuſe, much leſs ſuppreſs which of them they pleas'd, and ſo to create New ones at their ſole Wills; but were certainly obliged to proceed according to ſome known Rule in the execution of this Great Truſt, or elſe they could never have been ſubject to the Penalty in the Statute of the 5th of Richard the Second above-mention'd. And for the further proof of this, I deſire that thoſe of the Doctor's Opinion would ſatisfie us by what Rule Simon Montfort proceeded, in the firſt Summons that they ſuppoſe he made of Citizens and Burgeſſes to Parliament, in that remarkable year of the 49th of Henry the Third; for it appears that thoſe very Writs of Summons which the * Doctor hath cited for the Cities and Boroughs ſending Members to that Parliament, were not directed to the Sheriffs, but to the Cities and Boroughs themſelves; ſo that Montfort muſt have either appointed the Cities and Boroughs, which were thus writ to, to ſend Members to Parliament according to his ſole Direction, or he muſt have proceeded by ſome known Liſt or Rule, what Towns were Cities and Burghs, and what were not; and this way of directing Writs might have been us'd for ſeveral other Parliaments, tho' they do not appear, the Writs of Summons not being now extant.

If theſe Gentlemen will ſay Montfort had no other Rule for it, than what his own Judgment and Diſcretion, with the Advice of thoſe of his Faction thought fit to preſcribe, this is gratis Dictum, and withal highly improbable; ſince it appears not only from the Records the Doctor has cited, but alſo from the Hiſtories of thoſe Times, that there were divers Cities, Boroughs and Free-Boroughs then in being, which were poſſeſſed of ſeveral Great Priviledges that other Towns had not; and it further appears by the General Title to theſe Writs of Summons to the Cities and Boroughs, (which follow thoſe for the Knights of Shires) that it was then very well known what Towns were Cities and Boroughs, and what were not; the words are theſe, Item in eadem forma ſcribitur Civibus Ebor. Civibus Lond. & cæteris Burgis Angliæ, quod mittant, &c. without ſpecifying which they were, which would have been a very improper way, if thoſe Towns had been then firſt erected into Burroughs.

Beſides, if Montfort and thoſe of his Party had no other Rule to go by than their own particular Fancies in this Affair, it would have made them to have ſummon'd none, but the Great Cities and Rich Boroughs of England, which were able to bear the Expence of ſending up their Repreſentatives to Parliament; and that had been ſufficient to have countenanced his Proceedings, and not to have ſent Writs to all the reſt of the Boroughs of England, as it ſeems he did, by the words Cæteris Burgis Angliæ, without any Diſtinction, whom he muſt rather have diſobliged, than careſſed by laying this New and unheard of Burthen upon, of coming up to Parliament.

This alſo carried along with it a Right of giving Taxes by themſelves, and that in a larger Proportion than the reſt of the Towns of ſeveral Counties: which way of proceeding was not ſuitable to the Politick Contrivance of Simon Montfort and the Barons (as he ſays) of his Faction, whoſe Buſineſs it was to make as many Friends, and as few Enemies as they could; leaſt they ſhould quit theirs, and joyn with the King's Party.

But if on the other ſide the Gentlemen above-mention'd will own, that Montfort had then ſome known Rule to act by, and that it was upon Record in the Exchequer, or ſome other Place, what Towns were Cities and Boroughs, and what were not; the ſame Rule might be obſerved ever after, ſuppoſing (as Mr. Prynne does) that the Cities and Boroughs continued to ſend Members to Parliament all the reſt of this King's and his Succeſſor's Reigns; or if theſe Gentlemen will follow the Doctor's Opinion, and not allow them to have been ſummon'd again till the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt, the difficulty will prove the ſame; by what Rule thoſe Sheriffs that firſt ſent out their Precepts to Elect Citizens and Burgeſſes to Parliament then were? For I have already proved, that this General Clauſe in their Writs did impower and direct them to ſummon Members from ſuch Places, as were then actually Cities and Boroughs, but did not leave it to their Diſcretions, what were to be accounted ſo, and what not; ſince that had given them as great a Prerogative as the Crown it ſelf could exerciſe. But if (as Doctor Brady himſelf acknowledges) in the Caſe of the Town of Lindon, it was to be tryed by Domes-day-Book, and the Records of the Exchequer, which were Boroughs, and which were Ordinary Towns; this was certainly a ſtanding Rule for all other Places, and the Sheriffs might have kept among the Records of their Courts, perfect Liſts of ſuch Cities and Boroughs from the Exchequer, as were in their Reſpective Counties, though they are now loſt, as being of no uſe, ſince this matter is long ſince ſetled by a long conſtant uſage and practice.

Treat. of Boroughs, p. 41.

Having ſhewn the Great improbability and impracticableneſs of this Opinion, I ſhall conclude with a brief Anſwer to thoſe Arguments and Authorities Mr. Prynne has there given us to confirm it; which are in effect no more than this; that the Sheriffs of ſeveral Counties did in the Reigns he mentions, often ſend out Precepts to ſeveral New Boroughs, that had never ſent any Members to Parliament before, and conſequently that it was wholy in their Power, and left to their Diſcretion, to increaſe or omit them as they thought fit. But this will prove no Cogent Argument, ſince Mr. Prynne has not there made out the matter of Fact, viz. that thoſe Boroughs he mentions, never had any Precepts ſent them to elect Burgeſſes before the years he aſſigns; for the only proof he brings, that theſe Boroughs had never before ſent any Burgeſſes to Parliament, is, that he could find no Returns made by the Sheriffs of their Election, but only of thoſe he has diſcover'd, and therefore there could be none others ever iſſued; which does not by no means follow, unleſs he could have aſſured us, that he had gotten an entire Collection of all thoſe Returns, and that none of them had been loſt in ſo long a Tract of Time; but that it is more than probable, that many Returns for thoſe Boroughs he mentions, were loſt, or deſtroyed by ill-keeping, appears from theſe Conſiderations.

Firſt, That theſe Returns of the Sheriffs were never entred upon any Rolls, whereby they could be kept together, and found in an exact Series as other Records are; but were kept in diſtinct looſe Bundles, many of which Mr. Prynne himſelf preſerved from rotting by Duſt and Dampneſs in Cæſar's Chappel; and who can tell how many of them had periſhed by the ſame cauſes, or perhaps from other Accidents? Or, it may be, through the careleſneſs of the Officers, whoſe buſineſs it was to preſerve them, had never been carried up at all, but were left to take their Chance, and ſo were loſt among a multitude of other Records, that when once executed, were looked upon as of little or no value?

And that this is moſt likely to be the truth of Fact, I ſhall prove from the Inſtances and Obſervations Mr. Prynne himſelf has given us; firſt he obſerves, that all the Writs of Summons for Knights of Shires are loſt, from the 49*th* of Henry the Third, to the 23*d* of

Edward the Firſt, as alſo all the Writs for their Expences, till the 28*th* of that King; and certainly the Returns of Sheriffs for the Cities and Boroughs are more likely to have been loſt, as not being enter'd upon the Roll, but preſerved in looſe Bundles. Secondly, that as for the Cinque-Ports, viz. Dover, Rumney, Sandwich, Winchelſey and Haſtings, tho' there are no Returns at all to be found for their ſending any Members or Barons to Parliament before the Reign of Edward the Third, yet he grants, it appears from the Clauſe-Rolls, that they ſent them in ~~of~~ the 49*th* of Henry the Third; B.A.P. p.140. and Dr. Brady hath publiſhed the Writ to the Barons of Sandwich, for the Electing of two Members for that Parliament, and Mr. Prynne likewiſe grants from other Patent-Rolls, that they ſent their Barons to Parliament during the Reigns of Edward the Firſt and Second. Now if the Sheriff's Precepts for the Electing Burgeſſes, and the Returns of them by the Cinque-Ports are loſt, and this for thoſe that were then the moſt conſiderable Boroughs of England, can any one think, that the like Precepts and Returns were not loſt and deſtroy'd for many other Antient Boroughs of England? But this will ſtill further appear from another of * Mr. Prynn's Inſtances, concerning the Returns for theſe five New Boroughs (as he ſuppoſes them to be) in the Reign of Henry the Sixth, viz. Gatton, Heytesbury, Hyndford, Weſtbury and Wootton-Baſſet, which he grants to be even then, but poor, inconſiderable Places.

* Brevia Parliament. p. 228.

Now I will leave it to the Reader's conſideration, whether it be at all probable, that the Sheriff ſhould then take upon him to advance ſuch poor Towns into Boroughs, and make them Elect Burgeſſes to Parliament, and conſequently to pay their Expences, which muſt then be a great Charge and Burthen to them, and that too in an Age, when not the Neighbouring Gentlemen, but only Inhabitants of thoſe Places were capable of being Elected: Or whether thoſe Towns would have ſat down contented with ſuch an Impoſition, when upon their Petition to the King and his Council in Parliament, they might have been relieved and diſcharged from that Service; as in the Caſe of Toriton mention'd by Dr. Brady, of which I ſhall ſpeak further by and by. And no doubt but that there were ſeveral Others exempted upon the like Account, tho' the Charters for ſuch Exemptions might be loſt, and ſuch as theſe, I judge ſome of thoſe Boroughs to have been, which having diſcontinued ſending any Members to Parliament for ſeveral Ages, yet were reſtored to their Antient Priviledge by Order of the long Parliament in 1640, when Wages being then almoſt quite diſus'd, that Service was looked upon rather as an Advantage than a Burthen.

But tho' ſeveral poor Antient Boroughs did eſteem it a Charge and Trouble to them, yet that it was looked upon as a Great Priviledge by other Great and Richer-Towns, that could ſuſtain that Expence, appears from the Petitions of St. Albans and Barnſtable already mention'd, in which they inſiſted upon their Priviledge of ſending Burgeſſes to Parliament as their Antient and undoubted Right, and which was allow'd them by thoſe Kings to whom they petitioned: ſo that the Doctor's concluding Remark upon this Head, is untrue, † that no Burghs during all the Reigns (he inſtances in) from the time of Edward the Firſt, to Edward the Fourth, ever complain'd ty will prove the ſame; by what Rule thoſe Sheriffs that firſt ſent out their Precepts to Elect Citizens and Burgeſſes to Parliament then were? For I have already proved, that this General Clauſe in their Writs did impower and direct them to ſummon Members from ſuch Places, as were then actually Cities and Boroughs, but did not leave it to their Diſcretions, what were to be accounted ſo, and what not; ſince that had given them as great a Prerogative as the Crown it ſelf could exerciſe. But if (as Doctor Brady himſelf acknowledges) in the Caſe of the Town of Lindon, it was to be tryed by Domes-day-Book, and the Records of the Exchequer, which were Boroughs, and which were Ordinary Towns; this was certainly a ſtanding Rule for all other Places, and the Sheriffs might have kept among the Records of their Courts, perfect Liſts of ſuch Cities and Boroughs from the Exchequer, as were in their Reſpective Counties, though they are now loſt, as being of no uſe, ſince this matter is long ſince ſetled by a long conſtant uſage and practice.

Treat. of Boroughs, p. 41.

Having ſhewn the Great improbability and impracticableneſs of this Opinion, I ſhall conclude with a brief Anſwer to thoſe Arguments and Authorities Mr. Prynne has there given us to confirm it; which are in effect no more than this; that the Sheriffs of ſeveral Counties did in the Reigns he mentions, often ſend out Precepts to ſeveral New Boroughs, that had never ſent any Members to Parliament before, and conſequently that it was wholy in their Power, and left to their Diſcretion, to increaſe or omit them as they thought fit. But this will prove no Cogent Argument, ſince Mr. Prynne has not there made out the matter of Fact, viz. that thoſe Boroughs he mentions, never had any Precepts ſent them to elect Burgeſſes before the years he aſſigns; for the only proof he brings, that theſe Boroughs had never before ſent any Burgeſſes to Parliament, is, that he could find no Returns made by the Sheriffs of their Election, but only of thoſe he has diſcover'd, and therefore there could be none others ever iſſued; which does not by no means follow, unleſs he could have aſſured us, that he had gotten an entire Collection of all thoſe Returns, and that none of them had been loſt in ſo long a Tract of Time; but that it is more than probable, that many Returns for thoſe Boroughs he mentions, were loſt, or deſtroyed by ill-keeping, appears from theſe Conſiderations.

Firſt, That theſe Returns of the Sheriffs were never entred upon any Rolls, whereby they could be kept together, and found in an exact Series as other Records are; but were kept in diſtinct looſe Bundles, many of which Mr. Prynne himſelf preſerved from rotting by Duſt and Dampneſs in Cæſar's Chappel; and who can tell how many of them had periſhed by the ſame cauſes, or perhaps from other Accidents? Or, it may be, through the careleſneſs of the Officers, whoſe buſineſs it was to preſerve them, had never been carried up at all, but were left to take their Chance, and ſo were loſt among a multitude of other Records, that when once executed, were looked upon as of little or no value?

And that this is moſt likely to be the truth of Fact, I ſhall prove from the Inſtances and Obſervations Mr. Prynne himſelf has given us; firſt he obſerves, that all the Writs of Summons for Knights of Shires are loſt, from the 49*th* of Henry the Third, to the 23*d* of Edward

Edward the Firſt, as alſo all the Writs for their Expences, till the 28*th* of that King; and certainly the Returns of Sheriffs for the Cities and Boroughs are more likely to have been loſt, as not being enter'd upon the Roll, but preſerved in looſe Bundles. Secondly, that as for the Cinque-Ports, viz. Dover, Rumney, Sandwich, Winchelſey and Haſtings, tho' there are no Returns at all to be found for their ſending any Members or Barons to Parliament before the Reign of Edward the Third, yet he grants, it appears from the Clauſe-Rolls, that they ſent them ~~of~~ in the 49*th* of Henry the Third; and Dr. Brady hath publiſhed the Writ to the Barons of Sandwich, for the Electing of two Members for that Parliament, and Mr. Prynne likewiſe grants from other Patent-Rolls, that they ſent their Barons to Parliament during the Reigns of Edward the Firſt and Second. Now if the Sheriff's Precepts for the Electing Burgeſſes, and the Returns of them by the Cinque-Ports are loſt, and this for thoſe that were then the moſt conſiderable Boroughs of England, can any one think, that the like Precepts and Returns were not loſt and deſtroy'd for many other Antient Boroughs of England? But this will ſtill further appear from another of * Mr. Prynn's Inſtances, concerning the Returns for theſe five New Boroughs (as he ſuppoſes them to be) in the Reign of Henry the Sixth, viz. Gatton, Heytesbury, Hyndford, Weſtbury and Wootton-Baſſet, which he grants to be even then, but poor, inconſiderable Places.

* Brevia Parliament. p. 228.

Now I will leave it to the Reader's conſideration, whether it be at all probable, that the Sheriff ſhould then take upon him to advance ſuch poor Towns into Boroughs, and make them Elect Burgeſſes to Parliament, and conſequently to pay their Expences, which muſt then be a great Charge and Burthen to them, and that too in an Age, when not the Neighbouring Gentlemen, but only Inhabitants of thoſe Places were capable of being Elected: Or whether thoſe Towns would have ſat down contented with ſuch an Impoſition, when upon their Petition to the King and his Council in Parliament, they might have been relieved and diſcharged from that Service; as in the Caſe of Toriton mention'd by Dr. Brady, of which I ſhall ſpeak further by and by. And no doubt but that there were ſeveral Others exempted upon the like Account, tho' the Charters for ſuch Exemptions might be loſt, and ſuch as theſe, I judge ſome of thoſe Boroughs to have been, which having diſcontinued ſending any Members to Parliament for ſeveral Ages, yet were reſtored to their Antient Priviledge by Order of the long Parliament in 1640, when Wages being then almoſt quite diſus'd, that Service was looked upon rather as an Advantage than a Burthen.

But tho' ſeveral poor Antient Boroughs did eſteem it a Charge and Trouble to them, yet that it was looked upon as a Great Priviledge by other Great and Richer-Towns, that could ſuſtain that Expence, appears from the Petitions of St. Albans and Barnſtable already mention'd, in which they inſiſted upon their Priviledge of ſending Burgeſſes to Parliament as their Antient and undoubted Right, and which was allow'd them by thoſe Kings to whom they petitioned: ſo that the Doctor's concluding Remark upon this Head, is untrue, † that no Burghs during all the Reigns (he inſtances in) from the time of Edward the Firſt, to Edward the Fourth, ever complain'd of

of the Sheriffs for not returning them Boroughs, or the not ſending Precepts to them, as taking away their Birth-Rights, &c. nor was it accounted an Advantage, Honour, or Priviledge to be bound to ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament, but rather on the contrary, it was reputed a Burthen and a Grievance for Poor and ſmall Burghs to ſend them; and then he inſtances in the Caſe of Toriton in Devonſhire, which petition'd the King in Parliament to be diſcharg'd of ſending Burgeſſes to Parliament, which was granted.

vid. RS. col. p. 502. for that they h[illegible] never used to send any men to Parliament is before y 24 year of King Edward 3d. when the Sheriff of Devonshire [illegible] ly and maliciously returned them to have been [illegible] ly to Parliament

This I do not oppoſe, only it is to be noted, that in their Petition, they do not deſire to be exempted from that Service, as having any Antient Right to it, but ſet forth, that they were no Antient Borough, nor had ever been accuſtomed to ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament before the 21ſt of King Edward the Third; which whether true in matter of Fact or no, is not the Queſtion; for admitting it was an Antient Borough, it does not therefore follow, becauſe ſome poor Boroughs were willing to be rid of that Charge, and attendance in Parliament, that therefore there were none that accounted it an Honour or Priviledge to be ſo obliged; ſince certainly (in Caſe thoſe poor Boroughs could have afforded it) it was a Great Priviledge and Honour to give their Conſents to the granting of Aids and other Taxes, and to have a ſhare in the Legiſlative Power of the Nation. nor does it's being Chargeable and Burthenſom at all derogate from it's Honour, ſince even the Attendance of the Knights of Shires themſelves is a great Charge and Trouble; however, that does not make it no Priviledge and Honour to ſerve in Parliament; for it is an old Rule, qui vult ſentire Commodum, ſentire debet & Onus.

I ſhall now conclude with ſome ſhort Remarques, upon what Mr. Prynne has ſaid concerning the Partiality and favour of Sheriffs, in making divers new Boroughs to gratifie the Ambition of Neighbouring Gentlemen, who deſired to be choſen Members of Parliament. This indeed is not only very improbable, but highly impracticable, when Wages were paid by all Cities and Boroughs to their Members for the time they had ſerved; and which, as Dr. Brady himſelf acknowledges, was the main reaſon that made ſuch poor Boroughs ſo willing to be rid of the Burthen of ſending Burgeſſes to Parliament; ſo that before the latter end of the Reign of Henry the Eighth, the Sheriffs could not do it, till thoſe Wages generally were left off from being levied, or paid by the Reſpective Cities and Boroughs, which is not many years agone, no longer than the Reigns of Henry the Eighth, and his Succeſſors; when Gentlemen of Eſtates came to be commonly choſen, inſtead of the Burgeſſes of thoſe Towns, and by that time all the Boroughs of England that ſent Members to Parliament, were ſo well known and ſetled, that no Sheriff durſt at his Peril have iſſued out his Precepts to any new Towns, who had not been accuſtomed to ſend Burgeſſes in former times; for neither the King nor Houſe of Commons themſelves, would ever have endured ſuch an Encroachment and abuſe of the Sheriff's Power.

Beſides, if this had been a thing eaſie to be done, and which the Sheriffs could have juſtified as a Common practice, I ſee no reaſon why they might not have gratified their Neighbours, after once Wages were diſcontinued, and have ſent Precepts to Agmundeſham, Wendover, Milborn-Port, and ſeveral other Antient Towns of England to Elect Members of Parliament, though they had been excuſed from ſending any for above three hundred years, becauſe of their poverty; ſeeing that great Obſtacle of paying Wages being removed, there might have been Neighbouring Gentlemen enough to be found, who would have been very deſirous of that Honourable Imployment, and it is very likely would (had it been practicable) have gratified the Sheriffs very well for their ſo doing. And yet we do not find they ever durſt venture on ſo dangerous a Project, nor iſſue out any Precepts to thoſe Towns to chuſe Members, * till upon their Petitions to the Houſe of Commons in 1640, they were order'd to ſend out Precepts to thoſe Towns, and ſeveral others, that then deſir'd to be reſtor'd to their Antient Priviledge; in granting which, whither the Houſe of Commons in 1640, did well or ill, is not my preſent Buſineſs to examine. I ſhall conclude this Head with ſome ſhort Remarques upon † Mr. Prynn's 8*th* Obſervation, that upon the Conſideration of the Premiſſes, (that is, of thoſe Boroughs he there mentions, who in the year 1640, had the Priviledge of ſending Burgeſſes to Parliament again revived and regranted to them.) He is of Opinion, that ſince the Statutes of 5 Richard the Second, c. 4. 1 Henry the Fifth, c. 1. 23 Henry the Sixth, c. 25. no Sheriffs by vertue of the King's Writs of Summons, and forecited Clauſes in them, can erect, or enable any New-created, or old long diſcontinued Boroughs, to chuſe and return Burgeſſes to our Parliaments, what ever they antiently did or might do before theſe Acts.

In all which, though I agree with this Author concerning the matter of Law, yet I cannot ſee any reaſon why the Sheriffs ſhould have had greater Power to make what Boroughs they pleas'd to Elect Members to Parliament, or to excuſe thoſe they pleas'd to favour, before thoſe Statutes than afterwards. For whoever will take the Pains to conſult thoſe Statutes, will find, that they rather make againſt, than for this Author's Opinion; becauſe that of Richard the Second declares, that all ſuch who have Summons to Parliament, ſhall henceforth come thither, as hath been accuſtomed of old Time, and which is there as much declared to be the Right of the Citizens and Burgeſſes, as of the Biſhops and Peers; but as for the other Statutes of Henry the Fifth and Sixth, they were made to reſtrain and prevent the Abuſes of Sheriffs in making falſe Returns, not to abridg any Authority they before lawfully enjoy'd or exerciſed.

I ſhould have proceeded to the ‖ Doctor's ſecond Queſtion, who antiently were, or ought to be Electors in real or pretended Burghs? in deciding of which, he endeavours all he can to * prove (if poſſible) 'that the Election of Parliament-Men in all Cities and 'Boroughs, was, and ought to be in the Mayor or Bailiffs, and 'a ſelect number of the Common-Council, and richer Burgeſſes of 'thoſe Places, and not in the poorer Burgeſſes and ordinary Freemen; becauſe (I ſuppoſe) thoſe being a great Many, are not ſo eaſily bribed, or managed by the Court-Party, to pack a Parliament by Brow-beating, Threats, or perhaps open Force; as it is evident was intended, if a Parliament had been Elected according to King James the Second's new Model. But though I could ſay a great deal againſt againſt what the Doctor has there laid down for plain proofs, which indeed are not ſo; yet ſince theſe Papers have already ſwell'd to too great Bulk, and that I fear tiring the Reader's patience, I ſhall leave the Cities and Boroughs of England in the quiet poſſeſſion of their Antient Liberties, and Methods of Election of Citizens and Burgeſſes, which they now enjoy, by the happy coming in of our late Illuſtrious King William the Third of ever glorious Memory, who by the Bleſſing of Heaven broke and diſappointed all thoſe Popiſh and Arbitrary Deſigns then on foot, to deſtroy both our Religion and our Civil Liberties; which yet never could have been throughly effected, without new Modelling of Corporations by taking away their Old Charters, and granting Others upon thoſe Terms and Conditions the then Government thought fit to allow them. The main Project of this was, to reduce the Electors of all the Cities and Boroughs of England (which make above two Thirds of the Houſe of Commons) into as few Hands as they could, and thoſe were, in Town's Corporate, either known or ſuſpected Papiſts, or elſe open Diſſenters from the Communion of the Church of England as eſtabliſhed by Law.

P. 82. I ſhall now conclude this Diſcourſe, with anſwering an Objection to Mr. Petyt's Supplemental Argument, which was firſt made uſe of by him in his Right of the Commons aſſerted; whereby he would prove from the Titles to ſeveral Statutes made in the Reigns of William and Alexander the Firſt and Second Kings of Scotland, that the Citizens and Burgeſſes of the Principal Cities and Boroughs there, being alſo ſummon'd Time beyond Memory, there were always Commons in thoſe Parliaments; and conſequently that Government being the ſame in all the Eſſential Parts of it with Ours, it muſt have been ſo in England, likewiſe, long before the 49*th* of Henry the Third. I muſt confeſs that Dr. Brady in his Anſwer to this
* P. 98. Treatiſe of *Mr. Petyt's, has turn'd this Argument againſt him, and there proved, that the probi Homines Scotiæ, and the Liberi Tenentes mention'd after the Comites and Barones in thoſe Laws, were only the King's leſs Tenants in Capite, and ſuch as are called Lairds at this day, though they neither are, nor ever were Peers of Scotland, and ſo conſequently ſat as Commoners in thoſe Antient Parliaments; yet however, that the whole Civil Body or Communitas Regni (as it is ſtil'd in ſeveral Antient Statutes) always conſiſted of the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men or Tenants in Capite, the Doctor evidently proves by the Title to the † Statut. Rob. III. f. 63. † Laws of King Robert the Third, who began his Reign Anno Domini 1390. (being the tenth year of our Richard the Second) of which I ſhall give you the Engliſh Tranſlation, referring the Reader to the Doctor himſelf for the Latin One.

B. A. P. p. 99. The Parliament of our Lord Robert the Third, &c. King of Scots held at Scone on the twenty firſt of February, in the year of Grace 1400, and in the Eleventh year of his Reign (with the Continuation of the ſubſequent-Days) the Biſhops, Priors, Dukes, Earls, Barons, Free-holders and Burgeſſes, who hold of our Lord the King in Capite, or in Chief, being call'd and ſummon'd thither according to the uſual Cuſtom.

Then having ſhewn the Antient Conſtitution of the Scotiſh Parliaments, the Doctor for the Reader's ſatisfaction further tells us, when, and how it came to be alter'd; and for that end, he has there tranſcribed from the * Book of Statutes of that Kingdom, an Act made in the Seventh Parliament of King James the Firſt of Scotland, whereby the ſmall Baronnes and Freehalders were diſcharged from coming to Parliaments in their own Perſons, which being ſomewhat long, I ſhall give you here the Subſtance of it in the Scotiſh-Engliſh of that Time, and leave the Reader to peruſe the Act at large at his leaſure: It is to this effect.

Ibid.

* P. 17. n. 102.

The King with the conſent of the Haill Council generallie hes Statute, and Ordained, that the ſmall Barronnes, and Free-Tennentes neid not cum to Parliaments, nor General Councels, ſwa that of ilk Schireſdome there be ſend, choſen at the Head Court of the Schireſdome, twa, or maa Wiſe Men, after the largeneſs of the ſaid Schireſdome, &c. the quhilk ſall be call'd Commiſſares of the Schires, &c. quhilks Commiſſares ſall have full and haill Power of all the laif of the Schireſſedome under the witneſſing of the Schireffis Seal, with the Seales of diverſe Baronnes of the Schire, to heare, treate, and finallie to determine all Cauſes to be proponied in Councel or Parliament; then follows a Clauſe, that they ſhall have Coſtage, that is, Wages of ilk Schire; and concludes, that all Biſhoppes, Abbotes, Priors, Erles, Lordes of Parliament, and Ban-rentes, the quhilkis, the King will be received and ſummoun'd to Councel and Parliament be his ſpecial Precept.

Then to ſhew that this Statute was only made by the Tenants in Capite, the Doctor has there alſo tranſcribed the Title to this Act, which being in Latin, I ſhall give it you in Engliſh.

‘ In the Seventh Parliament or General Council of the moſt Illuſtrious Prince James, by the Grace of God of Scotland, held at Perthe on ‘ the firſt of March, Ann. Dom. 1427. and of his Reign the 23*d*, (with ‘ a Continuation of Days and Times) there being ſummon'd ‘ and called after the due and accuſtomed manner the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons and Free-holders, who hold of our Lord ‘ the King in Capite, and of each Borough certain Burgeſſes, who appearing, &c. yet this Statute was not ſo ſtrictly obſerved, but the Tenants in Capite did ſometimes after it's being enacted, come again to Parliament in a Body, and not by Repreſentatives, till this Law was renew'd and confirmed in the Eleventh Parliament of King James the Sixth, holden at Edenburgh, July 29. 1587. wherein after a ſhort recital of this † Act of King James the Firſt, there is appointed the manner of Electing the ſaid Commiſſioners of Shires by the ſmall Barons, or Free-Tenants in a Court, or Meeting to be held only for that purpoſe, together with the qualifications of the Perſons to be Elected, and that nane having voit *in their Election, bot ſik as hes * Fourtie Shilling Land in Free Tennendrie halden of the King and hes their actual Dwelling and Reſidence within the ſame Schire. And that the Compeirance of the ſaid † Commiſſioners of the Schires in Parliaments or General Councelles, ſall relieve the Haill Remanent ſmall Barronnes and Freehalders of the Schires of their Suites and preſence, aucht in the ſaids Parliaments.* By which Titles to the Statutes of King Robert the Third, and that of James the Firſt, and this ſubſequent Statute of James the Sixth, it plainly appears, (ſays the † Ibid. As to the Boroughs they make the Third Eſtate, † and do each of them ſend but one Burgeſs to Parliament (except Edenburgh, which ſends two) which are all Choſen by the Common Council of the Towns. There are in Scotland three ſorts of Burghs, that is to ſay, Royal-Burghs, Burghs of Regality, and Burghs of Barony: But the Royal-Burghs called Burgi Dominici Regis, or qui de Rege tenent in Capite, only ſend Commiſſioners to Parliament, and are in number Sixty.

Ibid. From all which Obſervations concerning the Conſtituent Parts or Members of the Scotiſh Parliaments, and the great Affinity or Likeneſs there was antiently between Ours and Theirs, the Doctor concludes it to be certain, that Our and their Communitas Regni was the ſame, that is, they were the ſmall Barons and Tenants in Capite; and it is highly probable, ſays he, that when this Communitas left off coming perſonally to Parliament in England, and came by Repreſentation, they were at firſt repreſented by Two of their own Number ſent from every County, and alſo that originally the Burghs that ſent Members to Parliament, were Burgi Dominici, the King's or Royal-Burghs, ſuch as ever did, and to this day in Scotland ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament.

But to give you all that the Doctor could ſay upon this Subject together, I ſhall here alſo add, what he has affirmed concerning the Firſt Electors of Knights of Shires in England, and who were the Perſons then Elected.

‖ P. 19. In his ‖ Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, he has already aſſerted, that the ſmaller Tenants in Capite with their Inferior Military Tenants, (in all probability) were the Men that firſt Elected two Knights in every County, out of the Tenants in Capite; and only they, as Suitors to the County-Court were the Electors, when at firſt the Body of them began to be thus repreſented, that 'tis very likely this was the reaſon of the Statute made afterwards in the 7*th* of Henry the Fourth, c. 15. Ann. Dom. 1406. that the Election ſhould be made in the County-Court by all the Suitors, &c. and that this likewiſe might be the Reaſon why the Statute of the 8*th* of Henry the Sixth, c. 7. by which any Man who had 40 s. per Annum, of any Tenure, was permitted to be an Elector, was altered, and ſo explain'd, that none but Free-holders of 40 s. per Annum, ſhould afterwards be Electors, appears by the 10*th* of Henry the Sixth, c. 2. made Ann. Dom. 1432. with reſpect perhaps to the leaſt part of a Knights-Fee, viz. 40 s. per Annum, which were then come into the Hands of very ordinary Men; for antiently, as he ſuppoſes, ſoon after or near the Conqueſt, there were very few, or no great Socages, that is, ſuch as held Great Eſtates in Socage; and neither the ſmall ones, nor the Nativi or Copy-holders were reputed * Liberi or Legales Homines, or performed the Service proper to ſuch Military Tenants, or thoſe to whom they had alienated part of their Fees.

Having truly ſet down the Antient and preſent Conſtitution of the Scotiſh Parliaments, from Dr. Brady's Anſwer to Mr. Petyt, as alſo his Opinion of our firſt Knights of Shires, I ſhall not deny the matter of Fact as to Scotland, to be as he has repreſented; but notwithſtanding the Reſemblance (which I grant) there was antiently between the Government of that, and this Kingdom; yet it does not follow, that it is either Now, or Ever was juſt the ſame in all points, as I can ſhew you from divers Inſtances. For the Authority of the King or Royal Prerogative, was antiently much more limited and reſtrained in Scotland, than it was in England; and the power of the Nobility or Great Tenants in Capite, was much more Abſolute in reſpect of the King, and alſo over their Tenants and Vaſſals, than ever it was in England, as I could prove particularly, were there any Occaſion for it. Nor does it follow, that becauſe the Communitas Regni, or Civil Body of that Kingdom, conſiſted wholy of Tenants in Capite, that therefore Ours muſt do ſo too; ſince in Scotland there is very little Socage-Tenure, and that which remains, is ſo wholy Servile, as to plough their Lord's Lands, &c. that it was much the ſame with our Copyhold Eſtates in England.

But on the contrary, there never was any ſuch thing in Scotland, as Tenure in Free-Socage by performing ſome few but honorable Services, or paying a certain Rent, as did the King's Tenants by Petty-Serjeanty in England, or elſe ſuch as held of the Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and Deans and Chapters of Cathedral-Churches, who held only in Libera Eleemoſina, and therefore their Tenants could not hold of them by Knight's-Service; and further, the greateſt part of Kent was Gavelkind-Land, held in Free-Socage, either of the King, or the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Biſhop of Rocheſter, or elſe of the Great Monaſteries in that County; and this is the reaſon why in * Domes-day-Book there are (beſides the King) but Twelve other Owners of Lands held by Knights-Service in Capite, of which the Lay-Tenants are but five, all the reſt being Biſhops or Abbots.

* Vid. Dr. B's Append. to his Introduct. p. 3.

Now all theſe Socage-Tenants taken together, made a conſiderable number of Perſons of very good Eſtates, notwithſtanding the Doctor's Aſſertion, that the Tenants in Socage were for a long time after the Conqueſt very few; whereas about the middle of Henry the Third's time, they were ſo numerous and conſiderable, that in certain Writs of that King, which He iſſued out to the Sheriffs for the Summoning in the County-Courts all ſuch to be made Knights, who held one Knights-Fee, or leſs than a whole Knights-Fee of any ſort of Tenure, dum tamen de Tenemento ſuo, tàm militari, quàm Socagio poſſint ſuſtentari, i. e. provided they could maintain themſelves (according to their Quality) out of their Eſtate or Tenement, as well of Military, as Socage Tenure. And the Priviledge of theſe Socage-Tenants was ſuch, that their Lords could not grant Taxes for them in Parliament at their pleaſure, as I have already proved from that Paſſage in Bracton, ſunt quædam Communes Preſtationes quæ ad Dominum Feodi non pertinent, &c. which I have cited at length in the former part of this Diſcourſe, and from whence alſo I have proved, that the Tenants in Capite, though they could grant a Scutage for Themſelves and their Tenants, yet they could not lay a Carvage, becauſe that Tax extended to all the Lands of the Kingdom, of whatſoever Tenure.

Rot. Clauſ. 24 Hen. III. M. 8. Dorſo. 26 Hen. III. M. 6. de Militibus faciendis.

And theſe Tenants in Free-Socage, were as much Freeholders, as thoſe by Military Service, and as ſuch, ow'd ſuit to the County-Court, or elſe they could not have been there ſummon'd by the Sheriffs to come and take the order of Knighthood, as by the foregoing Record is appointed; and theſe Tenants in Socage were alſo as Capable as thoſe by Knight's-Service, to give their Votes for the Repreſentatives-of their Reſpective Shires, and might if they had ſufficient Eſtates, be choſen themſelves, as appears by the Knights for Kent, who muſt have been for the moſt part Tenants in Gavelkind, ſince the greateſt ſhare of the Lands of that County were of that Tenure, as hath been juſt now obſerved: Whereas the Conſtitution of Scotland was quite otherwiſe, the Tenants in Capite there were almoſt the whole Kingdom; and thoſe by Knight's-Service under them made ſo ſmall a Figure, that when Commiſſioners for Shires were firſt appointed (by thoſe Statutes above-mention'd) to be choſen to come to Parliament, inſtead of the ſmall Barons or Tenants in Capite, the Inferior Tenants by Knight's-Service, who held under them, were not reckoned among the Liberi-Tenentes, or Freeholders of the Kingdom, neither were they admitted to have any thing to do at the Election of the ſaid Commiſſioners, and even the ſmaller Tenants in Capite themſelves, which had not 40 s. per Annum Rent, ſtand excluded from giving any Votes at ſuch Elections, by the Statute of James the Sixth above-mention'd: But here in England the Conſtitution was, that all Freeholders of what Tenure ſoever, had equal Votes at the Election of Knights of the Shires; and therefore it is a very erroneous Aſſertion of the Doctor's, and no way probable, that the Tenants in Capite, with their Inferior Military Tenants, were at firſt the only Electors of Knights of Shires, or that the Tenants in Capite were the only Perſons ſo Elected; ſince I have already proved, that other Inferior Tenants (provided they were Men of ſufficient Eſtates and underſtanding) were altogether as capable of being choſen Knights of Shires; and theſe indeed in ſeveral Records were called Grantz des Counties, yet not as the Doctor imagines, from their being Tenants in Capite, but from their having great Eſtates in their Countries of what Tenure ſoever, as I have already proved in another Place, and therefore need not repeat here.

And therefore what the Doctor hath cited from the Statutes of the 7th of Henry the Fourth, and 8*th* of Henry the Sixth, does not at all Countenance his Opinion, but the direct contrary; for he himſelf allows, that by the former of theſe Statutes all the Suitors at the County-Court of whatſoever Tenure, were permitted to give Votes at the Elections of Knights of Shires, which indeed was not a bare permiſſion, but a matter of Right; and if you pleaſe to peruſe that Statute of Henry the Sixth, cited by the Doctor, you will find it was not made to abridge that Liberty, but only to reduce the former Statute of Electors to a certain Value, and to exclude all Men of whatſoever Tenure, that had not 40 s. per Annum from giving any Votes at ſuch Elections; ſo that the Alteration was not (as he ſuppoſes) in the Tenure of the Electors, which continued ſtill the ſame Socage-Tenants, as well as thoſe by Military Service, having ſtill alike Votes at Elections, though as for Copyholders, they were not looked upon as Freeholders, and conſequently had not then, neither have at this day any Right to vote at the Elections of Knights of Shires.

But further to ſhew the improbability of the Doctor's Opinion, even from what he himſelf has proved concerning Scotland, that the Biſhops, Lords and Tenants in Capite, were not only antiently the Community, or whole Civil Body of the Kingdom, but are ſo to this day, the Commiſſioners for Shires did, and ſtill do only repreſent thoſe that chuſe them, and none Others; yet could not the King make even this Alteration, in appointing two of the ſmall Barons and Tenants in Capite, to appear for all the reſt by his own ſingle Prerogative; for the Doctor ſhews it was done by two ſeveral Statutes, to both which they gave their Conſents: and he further ſays (that it was not unlikely) that it was at their Requeſt, that the King conſented to it, to ſave the Trouble and Charges of all the reſt.

Now let thoſe of the Doctor's Opinion ſhew us any Law or Statute in England, whereby the Knights of Shires were ever appointed to repreſent all the Military Tenants of the Kingdom, and none other. and I ſhall then agree to whatſoever further they can ſay. But perhaps they will alledge, that whenever this Alteration was made, the King did it by his ſole Prerogative, as Simon Montfort made it at firſt by his own Uſurped Power, and that of his Faction; but this I deny, ſince I have already proved, that the Perſon laſt mention'd, had not ſuch an Abſolute Power, as to make ſo great a Change, without the expreſs Conſents of the Tenants in Capite themſelves, neither could Edward the Firſt do it (as the Doctor ſuppoſes he did) by his Sole Prerogative, for the leſs Tenants in Capite being then a very numerous and powerful Body, it was not in the Power of this King, to have ſo far abridged the Intereſt of all the Tenants in Capite, as appears by the indefinite words in the Writs of Summons, of giving the People a Right to chuſe any two Knights that were moſt fit for buſineſs, whether Tenants in Capite or no, is not mention'd, who could, when aſſembled in Parliament, make Laws for, and lay what Taxes they pleas'd, not only upon the Ordinary Freeholders, but even thoſe of whom they held their Eſtates; which had it been done without their Conſents, it is not likely they would ever have ſubmitted to it, without any Complaint; and I will give you one of the * Doctor's own Rerſons, why the Tenants in Capite were at firſt choſen Knights of Shires; for (ſays he) it is ſcarce credible, that thoſe Men, the Tenants in Capite, which made ſuch a noiſe for their Liberties, would part with this Main Point, of being perſonally preſent, or the Body of them Repreſented by ſome of their own Number in every County; and yet all this they tamely yielded to, without any Oppoſition or Law made for it, ſince we find in the Reigns of Edward the Third, and Richard the Second, Inferior Tenants to be choſen Knights of the Shire, as well as ſome of the Tenants in Capite, as I have already proved; which had it been (as the Doctor alledges) would no more have been ſubmitted to in this Kingdom, than in Scotland, without ſome Law or Statute to which thoſe Tenants at firſt gave their Conſents; and ſince there is no ſuch Law any where to be found, we may very well conclude, that the coming of Knights of Shires to Parliament is of that Antiquity, that it is as much beyond the Skill of any in this preſent Age to tell the Original of it, as it was ſo many Ages ago in the time of Edward the Firſt, when it was ſuppoſed, to be, time out of mind.

As for the Cities and Boroughs of Scotland, there is no ſuch great Reſemblance neither between Them and Ours of England; for whereas thoſe hold all immediately of the King, and are but Sixty in all; it is much otherwiſe here, for not a Fourth part of our Cities and Boroughs ever held in Capite, of the King, as I have already proved, againſt what the Doctor has aſſerted to the Contrary in another Place; and therefore ſhall ſay no more of it here: only cannot but take notice of his great partiality to the Scotiſh Royal-Boroughs above Ours of England; for whereas he ſays concerning the former, that they were ſuch, as ever did, and do at this day, ſend Burgeſſes to Parliament, I ſuppoſe the Doctor only meant that they ſent them time out of mind, not (to uſe his own words) ever ſince Adam, as he by way of Banter asks Mr. Petyt upon the Commons uſing the very ſame Phraſe in their Petition to King Henry the Fifth. So that it ſeems the Doctor can very well allow the Scotiſh Cities and Boroughs to have ever had Repreſentatives in their Parliaments beyond time of Memory; but as for thoſe of England, they muſt never have ſat there but Once, and that too in a time of Rebellion, till the 23*d* of Edward the Firſt. But ſure, if (as he there aſſerts) the Conſtituent Members of Parliament in both Kingdoms were the ſame, at leaſt the Cities and Boroughs, that held of the King in Capite, muſt have had the like Priviledge, or elſe there was one Order of Men leſs in our Engliſh, than in the Scotiſh Parliaments at that time, when (as the Doctor ſays) there were no Repreſentatives for Counties, and that the Biſhops and Great Lords, as Tenants in Capite, made but one Eſtate of Nobility with the leſs Tenants of the ſame Degree, who ſat in the ſame Houſe with the Peers. But perhaps the Doctor would ſay, (were he now alive) that England being a Conquer'd Kingdom, the King was Abſolute, and might model his Parliament as He pleas'd: If this were the Reply, I ſhould then refer him (as I do his Followers) to my laſt Introduction, and deſire them ſeriouſly to think of, and anſwer it, before they too poſitively aſſert that Opinion. And I hope in what I have ſaid on that Subject, I have uſed that Candor and Integrity as was requiſite for One, who deſires nothing more than the Diſcovery, and aſſerting of the Truth, which if I have not done as I ought, I ſhall own my ſelf beholding to any more able Pen, that ſhall ſhew me my Miſtakes, and will pleaſe to give greater Light to thoſe Antient Hiſtories, and Records, that have been made uſe of by both Parties in this weighty Controverſie.

B. A. P. p.86.

The enſuing Records are the Writs which were ſent by King Edward the Firſt, to Summon the Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes to the Great Council, or Parliament at Shrewsbury, which was held in the eleventh year of his Reign, an Abſtract of which you will find in the aforegoing Appendix, p. 57, 58. which ſince they have never been as yet publiſhed, I have thought fit here to inſert 'em, for the ſatisfaction of the Curious Reader. I have not thought fit to print any more Records, becauſe you will either find them in the Appendix, or elſe are there refer'd to, as being already publiſh'd in Dr. Brady's Treatiſes, which I have here undertook to Anſwer.

May it pleaſe our Lord the King, that it be ordain'd at this preſent Parliament, that the ſaid Wages ſhall be levied of all the Commons of the ſaid Counties, as well within Franchiſes as without; except the Franchiſes of Cities

ADVERTISEMENT.

SInce the finiſhing and printing off of the foregoing Sheets, I have been furniſhed by my learned and worthy Friend William Petyt, late Treaſurer of the Inner-Temple Eſq; and Keeper of her Majeſties Records in the Tower of London, with this laſt Record of the 51 of Edward the Third, which though not mentioned in the Treatiſe it ſelf, I deſire may be referr'd to p. 68, 69. of the foregoing Appendix, which being a Petition of the Knights of Shires, to the King in Parliament; and by him allow'd, may ſerve as an additional proof of the conſtant Claim the Commons have made before the King and Lords in Parliament, of their being therein repreſented of common Right of the Realm, that is by Preſcription, as well the Prelates, Dukes, Counts and Barons, is a ſufficient Conceſſion of their unqueſtionable Right.

I deſire the Reader would further take notice, that I have not only been obliged to that worthy Perſon abovementioned, whom, I muſt own, to have been my Maſter in all, that I have learnt from Records concerning this important Subject: But, beſides what I have already cited out of his Elaborate Treatiſe concerning the Antiquity of the Commons, muſt alſo own my ſelf obliged to him for the two firſt Records of the 11 E. 1. which he had the good fortune firſt to diſcover among the Rotuli Walliæ; as alſo for the ſupplemental Authorities to the Claim of the Town of St. Albans from the Writs of Expences above-mentioned, p. 61, 62, 63. By which it plainly appears, that the Claim of that Town of ſending Members to Parliament Time beyond Memory, was not only allow'd by the King and his Learned Councel in Parliament, but alſo aſcertain'd by their ſending Burgeſſes to ſeveral Parliaments both before and after that time, who had alſo their Expences allowed them by Writs directed for that purpoſe.

I muſt likewiſe own as much, concerning that material Record of the 14 & 17. E. 3. concerning the Claim of the Town of Barneſtaple mentioned p. 187. Wherein I deſire the Reader to take notice, that it is miſcited in the Margin, and inſtead of Bundle of Eſcheats in the Tower, it ſhould be, Rot. Pat. 14 E. 3. Part. 1. M. 2. dorſo.

The ſeveral Records concerning St. Albans and Barneſtaple, I have forborn to give you at length, becauſe I would not be too tedious, (the Work being near an End) but hope they may be one day publiſhed among the laborious Collections of the abovesaid Learned Author.

Page 135, at the end of the ſecond Paragraph, after theſe words, for the ſame Tenth, &c. add, And that theſe two Knights mentioned in the Writ firſt cited, who were to be choſen and ſent by the ſeveral Counties, and were to be joined to two others to make up the four, were neither inveſted by the King, nor thoſe that ſent them with the like Power and Authority as the two former, may appear by the Words of the laſt Writs themſelves compar'd with the firſt, 'which commands the ſeveral Sheriffs of Counties to 'cauſe to be choſen and ſent up to Weſtminſter, two of the moſt 'diſcreet Knights, and the moſt able for Buſineſs, to be preſent 'at the Time and Place therein expreſs'd, with full Power for 'themſelves and the whole Community of the ſaid County, to ad'viſe and conſent for themſelves and the ſaid Community, to what 'the ſaid Earls and Barons have unanimouſly ordain'd concerning 'the Premiſes, ſo that for defect of ſuch Power, the ſaid Buſineſs 'may not remain undone, &c.

But in the ſecond Writ which commands the ſame Sheriffs to cauſe two others to be choſen and return'd together with the former, the Power of theſe latter is not ſo large as the others, it being only thus, that they ſhould be at Weſtminſter at the Day appointed by the Writ, to hear and do whatſoever We (i. e. the King) ſhould then and there enjoin them; by which words it plainly appears, that the two former of theſe Knights, were impower'd by their reſpective Counties to give their Advice and Conſent to what was propos'd to 'em by the Lords, whereas the other two were only to receive ſome further Inſtructions and Commands from the King, relating to ſome other Buſineſs, than that which the Lords and great Men had agreed on, ſo that granting this Aſſembly to have been a Parliament, (as I ſuppoſe it was not) the Doctor cannot at all make out, that either the concurring to the making of Statutes, or their Conſent in granting of Money, was intruſted with more than the firſt two Knights, as will more fully be evident from the Writs themſelves, which I have truly tranſcrib'd from Dr. Brady's Anſwer to Mr. Petyt's Rights of the Commons aſſerted. Page 151.

And now I have fairly given you theſe two Records from the Doctors own Copy, I ſhall leave it to the Reader's Conſideration, whether the forced Conſequences he has drawn from it are true or not, viz. ‘that from the variation of theſe Writs and other Records, it is moſt evident, that it was from this King's Authority this time, that the Houſe of Commons came to be fixed and eſtabliſhed in the preſent conſtant Form it now is, and hath heen in for many King's Reigns; and that the King in this Age was not altogether confin'd to any certain number of Knights, Citizens, or Burgeſſes, nor were the ſeveral ſtrict Forms and Uſages now practiſed, ever then thought of, or ſome legal Niceties and Punctilioes now in uſe, then judged abſolutely neceſſary.

The next Authority the Doctor hath made uſe of, to prove, that it was antiently in the King's Power to cauſe the Sheriff to return ſuch Members to Parliament as he ſuppos'd would beſt do his Buſineſs there; immediately follows in the next Leaf of the ſaid Anſwer, being a * Writ to the Sheriff of Cumberland. T. Rege apud* le Roſe, 26 die Steptembris.

This Record being long, I ſhall not give my ſelf the trouble to tranſlate it verbatim; but the ſubſtance of it is, 'That the ' Sheriffs ſhould cauſe to come before the King at his Parliament,

' to be held at Lincoln on the Octaves of St. Hillary, two Knights ' of each County, and two Citizens and two Burgeſſes of each Ci' ty and Borough of England, who came to the laſt Parliament,
' for the finiſhing and ſetling the Perambulation of Foreſts, &c.
' and that if any of the ſaid Knights or Burgeſſes were ſick or dead,
' Others ſhould be choſen in their rooms, who were likewiſe to ' appear at the ſame Parliament.

Yet notwithſtanding all this, it is no ſuch extraordinary ſtrain of this King's Prerogative, as the Doctor would infer from it; for whoever will conſider the Reaſons, that the King gives in this Writ, for ſo doing, viz. ' that tho' the ſaid faithful Subjects (the ' Commons, who had appeared in the laſt Parliament) had then
' laid before him, what they had done in that Buſineſs, yet ſince
' the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Great Men of the King' dom were not then preſent with him, and being willing to hear
' his own, as well as their Reaſons by whoſe Advice he intended ' to act in that Buſineſs; eſpecially, ſince they were oblig'd by ' their Oaths, together with himſelf, to obſerve the Rights of his ' Crown and Kingdom; and in like manner that thoſe, whom that ' Buſineſs did chiefly concern, were not then prepar'd to give in ' their Reaſons, and without whoſe Advice he could not put an ' end to that Affair; therefore becauſe he deſir'd to diſpatch it with ' all ſpeed, and that it might not receive any prejudice by further
' delays, he had appointed the ſame Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes
' to appear before him in the next Parliament, as aboveſaid. All which conſider'd, the King had very good reaſon, nay, was in a manner oblig'd, to act as he did, ſince the former Parliament could do nothing in the Affair for which they were ſummon'd, by reaſon of the abſence of a great many of the Lords; ſo that it ſeems they were diſſolved Re infectâ. And therefore who were more fit to appear in the next Parliament, as being beſt acquainted with the Buſineſs about which they were ſummon'd, than thoſe Knights and Burgeſſes who had been choſen and appear'd at the laſt Parliament, wherein this great Buſineſs concerning the Perambulation of Foreſts had been firſt propos'd?

Not that the Sheriff had thereby any power blindly to return the ſame Perſons, without a new Election in the County Court; for thoſe general Words in the Writ, Quod venire facias coram Nobis, do not imply any ſuch thing; for beſides, that it is particularly directed, that in the room of thoſe, who were ſick or dead, other fit Perſons were to be elected, the following Clauſe in the Writ it ſelf ſufficiently ſhews, that all the reſt were to be ſo likewiſe. Ita quod Milites, Cives & Burgenſes prædicti dictis die & loco, modis omnibus interſint, cum plenâ poteſtate audiendi & faciendi, ea quæ ibidem in præmiſſis ordinari continget pro communi commodo dicti Regni, i. e. that the aforeſaid Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes ſhould be preſent at the Day and Place aforeſaid, with full Power to hear and do thoſe things which ſhall there happen to be ordain'd concerning the Premiſſes, for the common good of the ſaid Kingdom.

Now how theſe Knights, Citizens and Burgeſſes, could be indu'd with this full Power of acting for thoſe they repreſented, without being again elected, I can by no means underſtand; ſo that the utmoſt that can be inferr'd from this Writ, is, that the King in a caſe of neceſſity then order'd the People to chuſe, and the Sheriff to return, as many of the ſame Members as were alive, or not being ſick, were able to ſerve again; which whether it could be done now, or not, is not the Queſtion; ſince I grant that in that Age which regarded more the Subſtance than the Circumſtances of things, the King might then exerciſe a higher Prerogative than he can do at this day, when things have been ſo long ſetled in a different courſe: It is ſufficient for our purpoſe, that the Commons then had, according to antient Cuſtom, their Repreſentatives in this Parliament of the 28th of Edward the Firſt, lawfully choſen and empower'd to act for them in the Buſineſs about which they were ſummon'd.

Theſe here printed are all the Records that I think fit to trouble the Reader with at this time; not but that I confeſs, I have been forced to omit ſome very material Inſtruments and Charters which I promiſed in my Hiſtory to publiſh in the Appendix, ſuch as is that memorable one recited at large in the Chronicle of Lanercoſt, containing King Edward the Third's Releaſe of the Superiority which he or his Anceſtors had, or could pretend to over the Kingdom of Scotland.

This Charter, I confeſs, I omitted to tranſcribe, when I took that Extract out of it, which is ſet down in my Hiſtory; and I ſhou'd have been glad to have given it at large, ſince it is not to be found either in the Cloſe or Patent-Rolls in the Tower, having never been enter'd there, or elſe taken off from the Roll, when King Edward revoked that Charter, as being procur'd by the Power of the Queen his Mother and her Favourite Mortimer, during his Minority; but the reaſon why I cannot publiſh it now, as I promiſed, is, becauſe the Cottonian Library being lock'd up, ſince the death of the late worthy Owner Sir John Cotton Baronet, there is no eaſie acceſs to it, to take out any Books, or tranſcribe any thing contained in them. And I deſire that the Reader would accept of the ſame Excuſe as to any other Inſtruments which I have any way mention'd in the precedent Hiſtory to be publiſh'd in the foregoing Appendix.

Mutanda & Addenda

To the foregoing

HISTORY.

THESE, had the Author been in Town, ſhou'd have been printed in their due place immediately after the Hiſtory, to which they belong, viz.

Page 80. line 41. after theſe Words, with France, add,* and there was then granted him a Tenth from the Lords and Communities of Counties, and a ſixth part of the Goods of Cities and Boroughs; which is very remarkable, ſince the Writs of Summons being loſt, Dr. Brady will not allow the Citizens and Burgeſſes to have been ſummon'd to this Parliament.

Pag. ead. after theſe Words, inſtead of, there was a Convocation, &c. read, And there had been a Convocation alſo † ſummon'd not long before to be held at the ſame Place, at the Feaſt of St. Matthew or 21*ſt* of September, wherein the Biſhops and Clergy, &c. as it ſtands in the foregoing Hiſtory. P. 81. l. 1. d. Proctors of the Clergy, and read, the Inferior Clergy, viz. the Proctors of the Deans and Chapters, with the Archdeacons, for I am now ſufficiently ſatisfied from the Reverend Doctor Wake's Arguments and Authorities, againſt Doctor A's Rights of an Engliſh Convocation, in his State of the Church, &c. p. 231, to 238. that the Proctors of the Inferior Clergy, as choſen by themſelves, were not ſummon'd to this Parliament, tho' they were to that of the Year following, of which I ſhall ſpeak further, when I come to it.

P. 89. l. 16. after the Words, their Inhabitants, add this: Upon a Review of this Work, after it was printed off, I muſt own, that upon better conſideration of the Writs of * Summons this Year, being the 23*d* of Edward I. the Parliament which I have ſaid in the Hiſtory, p. 88. the laſt Paragraph, to have met at St. Edmundsbury, was not held there at all this Year; but as appears by thoſe Writs upon the Cloſe-Roll, was ſummon'd to meet at Weſtminſter on the 1*ſt* of Auguſt, and by reaſon of the King's abſence was firſt progu'd until the Sunday after Martinmas, and from thence was again progu'd until the Sunday before St. Andrews day, or the 30*th* of November; and to which (as appears by the Writ of Summons to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury) beſides the Proctors of the ſeveral Chapters of Cathedrals, thoſe choſen by the Inferior Clergy were now alſo ſummon'd; this is confirm'd by ſome of our † Hiſtorians of that time, who expreſly tell us, that on the ſecond day of this Parliament the King demanded of the Archbiſhop an Aid from the Clergy, and He and they having deliberated thereupon, granted him a Tenth upon certain Conditions, promiſing withal a farther Supply the next Year, if in the mean time a Peace were not made with France, or at leaſt a Truce in order to a Peace. And therefore this Parliament, which is ſaid in the † Hiſtory to have been held about this time at St. Edmundsbury, did not meet there till the morrow after All Souls Day, or 3*d* of November, A D. 1296. as appears by the Writs of Summons on the Roll, which I have cited in the Margin of the * Hiſtory under the following Year. Tho', I confeſs, I cannot tell how to reconcile this with the great Record in the Tower concerning the King's Superioriry over Scotland, which expreſly recites Mackduff's, Earl of Fiſe, proſecuting his Plea againſt the King of Scots, in the Parliament held at St. Edmundsbury in the 23*d* of Edward I. and of the Scottiſh King's ſending thither the Abbot of Aberbrothok to appear and anſwer for him; for that Record and thoſe Writs of Summons in the Cloſe Rolls are expreſly oppoſite to each other, unleſs we may ſuppoſe, that the Clerk or Notary, who was imploy'd to draw up all the Tranſactions between King Edward and John Baliol, King of Scots, ſome Years after, did by truſting only to his Memory, and not conſulting the Records, miſtake the Parliament, which was indeed held at Weſtminſter, and in which thoſe things relating to the King of Scots were tranſacted, for that which was held at St. Edmundsbury the Year following; when it was indeed impoſſible for any ſuch thing to have happen'd; for the King of Scots abovemention'd, being already ſubdu'd, and having ſurrender'd up his Kingdom to King Edward in Auguſt this Year, and being now a Priſoner, could not ſend any Envoys to the Parliament which was held on the 3*d* of November following; or could tranſact thoſe matters there, which I have related in the precedent Hiſtory; but in this I am not the only Perſon that have been miſtaken, ſince Dr. Brady having been alſo miſled by the Scottiſh Roll above-cited, has referr'd this Action of Mackduff's proſecuting his Appeal, and the King of Scots Anſwer thereunto by his Envoys, to the Parliament of St. Edmondsbury, which the Doctor, tho' erroniouſly, ſuppoſes to have been held this Year, and therefore wholly omits the mentioning the Parliament, which was indeed ſummon'd to, and held at Weſtminſter at that time, ſince that would have been directly to contradict his own Relation.

This I thought fit to advertiſe the Reader of, ſince I did not diſcover it till after the Work was printed, though had I been preſent when thoſe Sheets ſhould have paſſed my Review, I might then have alter'd them as I have now done, and intend to do, if ever this Work will bear another Edition; in the mean while, I look upon it to be my Duty as a faithful Hiſtorian, whenever I am convinced of any material Error or Miſtake, to rectify it as ſoon as I can; that my Readers may not be miſled by the ſeeming Authority even of Records themſelves, when they palpably contradict each other, as they do in the time of the Tranſactions mentioned in the precedent Hiſtory in the places above-cited.
